Rome, June 1800

Act I

Morning, the Church of Sant'Andrea della Valle

Intermission (AT APPROXIMATELY 1:20 PM)

Act II

That evening, Scarpia's rooms in the Palazzo Farnese

Intermission (AT APPROXIMATELY 2:35 PM)

Act III

Dawn, the prison and ramparts of Castel Sant'Angelo

Act I

Cesare Angelotti, an escaped political prisoner, rushes into the church of Sant'Andrea della Valle. He hides in one of the chapels just before the painter Mario Cavaradossi arrives to work on his portrait of Mary Magdalene. The painting has been inspired by the Marchesa Attavanti, whom Cavaradossi has seen in the church but does not know. He is struck by the resemblance of the dark-haired beauty of his lover, the singer Floria Tosca, and that of the blonde Marchesa Attavanti. Angelotti, who was a member of the former Bonapartist government, emerges from his hiding place. Cavaradossi recognizes him and promises help, then hurries him back into the chapel as Tosca is heard calling from outside. She jealously asks Cavaradossi whom he has been talking to and reminds him of their rendezvous that evening. Suddenly recognizing the Marchesa Attavanti in the painting, she accuses him of being unfaithful, but he assures her of his love. When Tosca has left, Angelotti again comes out of hiding. A cannon signals that the police have discovered the escape, and he and Cavaradossi flee to the painter's house. The sacristan enters with choirboys who are preparing to sing in a Te Deum celebrating the recent victory against Napoleon at the Battle of Marengo. Their excitement is silenced by the arrival of Baron Scarpia, chief of the secret police, who is searching for Angelotti. When Tosca comes back looking for Cavaradossi, Scarpia shows her a fan with the Attavanti crest that he has just found. Seemingly finding her suspicions about her lover's infidelity confirmed, Tosca bursts into tears. She vows vengeance and leaves as the church fills with worshippers. Scarpia sends his men to follow her to Cavaradossi, with whom he thinks Angelotti is hiding. While the congregation sings the Te Deum, Scarpia declares that he will bend Tosca to his will.

Act II

Scarpia anticipates the pleasure of having Tosca in his power. The spy Spoletta arrives with news that he was unable to find Angelotti. Instead he brings in Cavaradossi. While Scarpia interrogates the defiant painter, Tosca is heard singing at a royal gala in the same building. Scarpia sends for her and she appears just as Cavaradossi is being taken away to be tortured. Frightened by Scarpia's questions and Cavaradossi's screams, Tosca reveals Angelotti's hiding place. Cavaradossi is brought in, badly hurt and hardly conscious. When he realizes what has happened, he angrily confronts Tosca, just as the officer Sciarrone rushes in to announce that Napoleon in fact has won the battle, a defeat for Scarpia's side. Cavaradossi shouts out his defiance of tyranny and is dragged off to be executed. Scarpia calmly suggests to Tosca that he would let Cavaradossi go free if she'd give herself to him. Fighting off his advances, she declares she has dedicated her life to art and love and calls on God for help. Scarpia insists, when Spoletta interrupts: faced with capture, Angelotti has killed himself. Tosca, now forced to give in or lose her lover, agrees to Scarpia's proposition. Scarpia orders Spoletta to prepare for a mock execution of Cavaradossi, after which he is to be freed. Tosca demands that Scarpia write her a safe-conduct. When he has done so, she grabs a knife from a table and stabs him.

Act III

Cavaradossi awaits execution. He bribes the jailer to deliver a farewell letter to Tosca, then, overcome with emotion, gives in to his despair. Tosca appears and explains what has happened. The two imagine their future in freedom. As the execution squad arrives, Tosca implores Cavaradossi to fake his death convincingly, then hides. The soldiers fire and depart. Cavaradossi doesn't move and Tosca realizes that Scarpia has betrayed her. Just as Spoletta rushes in to arrest her, she leaps from the battlement.

Giacomo Puccini

Tosca

Premiere: Teatro Costanzi, Rome, 1900

Puccini's melodrama about a volatile diva, a sadistic police chief, and an idealistic artist has offended and thrilled audiences for more than a century. Critics, for their part, have often had problems with Tosca's rather grungy subject matter, the directness and intensity of its score, and the crowd-pleasing dramatic opportunities it provides for its lead roles. But these same aspects have made Tosca one of a handful of iconic works that seem to represent opera in the public imagination. Tosca's popularity is further secured by a superb and exhilarating dramatic sweep, a driving score of abundant melody and theatrical shrewdness, and a career-defining title role.

The Creators

Giacomo Puccini (1858–1924) was immensely popular in his own lifetime, and his mature works remain staples in the repertory of most of the world's opera companies. His operas are celebrated for their mastery of detail, sensitivity to everyday subjects, copious melody, and economy of expression. Puccini's librettists for Tosca, Giuseppe Giacosa (1847–1906) and Luigi Illica (1857–1919), also collaborated with him on his two other most enduringly successful operas, La Bohème and Madama Butterfly. Giacosa, a dramatist, was responsible for the stories and Illica, a poet, worked primarily on the words themselves. Giacosa found the whole subject of Tosca highly distasteful, but his enthusiastic collaborators managed to sway him to work on the project. The opera is based on La Tosca by Victorien Sardou (1831–1908), a popular dramatist of his time who wrote the play specifically for the talents of the actress Sarah Bernhardt.

The Setting

No opera is more tied to its setting than Tosca: Rome, the morning of June 17, 1800, through dawn the following day. The specified settings for each of the three acts—the Church of Sant'Andrea della Valle, Palazzo Farnese, and Castel Sant'Angelo—are familiar monuments in the city and can still be visited today. While the libretto takes some liberties with the facts, historical issues form a basis for the opera: the people of Rome are awaiting news of the Battle of Marengo in northern Italy, which will decide the fate of their symbolically powerful city.

The Music

The score of Tosca (if not the drama) itself is considered a prime example of the style of verismo, an elusive term usually translated as “realism.” The typical musical features of the verismo tradition are prominent in Tosca: short arias with an uninhibited flood of raw melody, including the tenor’s Act I soliloquy shortly after the curtain rises and his unforgettable “E lucevan le stelle” (“And the stars were shining”) in Act III; ambient sounds that blur the distinctions between life and art (the cantata heard through the window in Act II, the passing shepherd’s song, and the extraordinary tolling of morning church bells as dawn breaks to open Act III); and the use of parlato—words spoken instead of sung—at moments of tension (Tosca’s snarling “Quanto? Il prezzo!” in Act II as she asks the price she must pay for her lover’s life). The opera’s famous soprano aria, “Vissi d’arte” in Act II, in which Tosca sings of living her life for love and her art, also provides ample opportunity for intense dramatic interpretation. One of Tosca’s most memorable scenes is the Te Deum, in which the baritone’s debased inner thoughts are explored against a monumental religious procession scored for triple chorus and augmented orchestra including bells, organ, and two cannons.

Met History

A year after its world premiere in Rome, Tosca premiered at the Met with an all-star cast that included the great baritone Antonio Scotti as Scarpia. Scotti would go on to sing the part 217 times at the Met, a house record for an artist in a lead role. Among his principal Toscas were Emma Eames, Geraldine Farrar, Olive Fremstad, Emmy Destinn, Claudia Muzio, and Maria Jeritza. Farrar headlined a new production in 1917, which, incredibly, was in use for half a century. Renata Tebaldi, Richard Tucker, and Leonard Warren, with Dimitri Mitropoulos conducting, headlined a “revised” production in 1958, and in 1968 a new one directed by Otto Schenk starred Birgit Nilsson, Franco Corelli, and Gabriel Bacquier. Maria Callas brought her legendary portrayal of Tosca to the Met for six performances, two each in 1956, 1958, and 1965. A new staging by Franco Zeffirelli premiered in 1985 starring Hildegard Behrens, Plácido Domingo, and Cornell MacNeil with Giuseppe Sinopoli conducting. The current production by Luc Bondy opened the Met’s 2009–10 season with Karita Mattila in the title role, Marcelo Álvarez as Cavaradossi, and James Levine conducting the opera of his 1971 Met debut.

Program Note

When looking for an operatic subject, Giacomo Puccini suffered agonies of doubt; when decided, his certainty about what he wanted could be the despair of his librettists. Puccini knew about Victorien Sardou's 1887 play La Tosca as early as 1889, when he wrote to his publisher, Giulio Ricordi: "In this Tosca I see the opera which exactly suits me, one without excessive proportions, or decorative spectacle, and one which gives opportunity for an abundance of music...."

We don't know what happened to this early initiative: Puccini turned instead to Manon Lescaut and La Bohème while Tosca was taken up by another Ricordi composer, Alberto Franchetti. In 1894 Franchetti and his librettist, Luigi Illica, were in Paris to confer with Sardou, and one evening Illica read his text aloud, with Verdi among the listeners. Puccini set great store by the enthusiasm of colleagues—he had insisted on composing Manon in the face of Massenet's already successful work, and successfully confronted Leoncavallo's simultaneous Bohème. The combination of Verdi's reported praise and Franchetti's possession of the subject probably revived Puccini's earlier interest in Tosca. Ricordi had no doubt which of his two composers would produce a more successful opera, and so a somewhat discreditable maneuver ensued: Ricordi and Illica persuaded poor Franchetti that the subject was, after all, not suitable for operatic treatment—too brutal, too risqué, too tied to forgotten historical events. The ruse worked, and by the end of the year Illica was at work for Puccini, aided by Giuseppe Giacosa, his collaborator on La Bohème.

By that time, in Florence in October 1895, Puccini had seen Sarah Bernhardt perform the play, a skillful tapestry combining historical drama, revolutionary politics, love and religion, architectural spectacle, melodrama, and Grand Guignol into a closely plotted mechanism of ever-tightening tension. Inevitably, in the compression of Sardou's five acts to the opera's three, a good deal of meticulously laid detail and motivation went by the boards. The political circumstances—the occupation of Rome by the Bourbons of Naples, Cavaradossi's liberalism, the approach of Napoleon's army—are reduced to a few obscure phrases. Gone altogether is the original significance of the Angelotti affair. Visiting London years before, Sardou's Angelotti had spent a week with a beautiful girl who plied the oldest profession in Vauxhall Gardens. When he met the same girl later in Naples, she was Lady Hamilton—and so unhappy at being recognized that she had Angelotti framed as a revolutionary and imprisoned. Scarpia, sent by the court of Naples to control dissidence in Rome, knows Lady Hamilton's influence over the queen, and knows that Angelotti's escape can cost him his position.

Yet Puccini was quite certain of the effect he could make with the scenes that suited his talents. His invention yielded some memorable musical images, notably the three-chord progression that opens the opera and embodies the menace of Scarpia, and the headlong syncopations that follow it: Angelotti in flight. The suave bell-like theme that opens the Scarpia–Tosca conversation in Act I, the rising bass line that tautens the torture scene, and the suspenseful orchestral motives that wind through the murder at the end of Act II and through the “mock” execution in Act III are all masterfully extended and developed. And in lyric mastery no Puccini score can surpass the first-act duet, the tenor arias, or Tosca’s second-act prayer. (There is, in fact, a unifying “Tosca melos,” a pattern of rising and falling thirds, that underlies many of the themes.)

The time-consuming process of compressing Sardou and revising the libretto was complicated by the resistance of Giacosa, who sincerely believed the play unsuitable for operatic treatment: “The first act consists of nothing but duets. Nothing but duets in the second act (except for the short ‘torture’ scene in which only two characters are seen on stage). The third act is one interminable duet.” He was right in terms of operatic tradition, but of course Puccini was in the process of redefining that. (So were others: a few years later Strauss would produce Elektra, almost entirely a succession of one-on-one confrontations.)

Though most of the libretto was in hand to Puccini’s satisfaction by the end of 1896, he didn’t begin composition until January 1898. Twice he visited Sardou in Paris, finding the old man, now more than 70, “prodigious.” In 1899 the playwright was preparing a revival of his play with Bernhardt. Wrote Puccini: “In sketching the panorama, he wanted the course of the Tiber to be seen passing between St. Peter’s and the Castello!! I told him that the flumen flows past on the other side, under the Castello. But he, as calm as a fish, said: ‘Oh, that’s nothing!’ A fine fellow, all life and fire and full of historical-topo-panoramical inexactitudes.”

Puccini, for his part, cared a good deal about accuracy, directing precise inquiries to friends in Rome about the appropriate liturgical music and processional order in Act I, about the tuning of the matin bells that would be heard from the Castel Sant’Angelo at the beginning of Act III (in the end, he made a field trip to Rome himself to check this out), about a suitable dialect text for the shepherd boy heard in the same scene. The first act was completed in 1898, the second act the following July. Aspects of the libretto were still under discussion, especially the aria Cavaradossi was to sing in the final act. Puccini objected to the reflective, philosophical “farewell to life and art” that the librettists furnished (and which Verdi had much admired, a fact that no doubt stiffened their resistance). The composer wanted a passionate personal statement and finally insisted, playing the music of what would become “E lucevan le stelle,” complete with dummy words, for Illica and Giacosa. The opera was finished on September 29, 1898, and although Ricordi offered serious objections about the “conception and craftsmanship” of the third act, Puccini held his ground and changed nothing.

The premiere took place, appropriately enough, in Rome, at the Teatro Costanzi on January 14, 1900. Ercilea Darclée sang the title role, with Emilio De Marchi as Cavaradossi and Eugenio Giraltoni as Scarpia; Leopoldo Mugnone conducted. Despite mixed reviews, the new work was an immediate box-office success and was quickly taken up around the world.
