Mozart’s The Magic Flute—his last opera to be produced before his untimely death at age 35—is a remarkable combination of musical and dramatic styles, from the earthly to the otherworldly. The story begins as a magical rescue mission, a plot outline that would have been familiar to Viennese audiences of the popular theater, but soon transforms into a fable of enlightenment and humanity. With its program of inner development and illumination, The Magic Flute imagines a world of peace, brotherhood, and love.

This special holiday presentation of The Magic Flute is an abridged English-language version of the production by the award-winning theater, opera, and film director Julie Taymor. Taymor seeks to remain true to the fairy-tale aspect of the story while revealing what she calls its “darker face, the one that is hidden in the innocent shell of the unruly libretto but apparent in the exquisite subtlety of the music.” In developing the colorful visual style of her production, she was inspired by the patterns viewed through the tube of a kaleidoscope, which she sees as an ideal way to express “both the exterior and inner landscapes of The Magic Flute.” Taymor’s whimsical production magnifies the opera’s emotional threads, highlights the story’s humor, and captures the ethereal nature of Mozart’s music.

This guide is intended to help your students appreciate the opera within the context of 18th-century politics, philosophy, and musical style. By studying Mozart’s musical invention through a selection of arias from the opera, students will discover some of the elements that make The Magic Flute not only a product of its age but also an enduring masterwork of the operatic canon. The information on the following pages is designed to provide context, deepen background knowledge, and enrich the overall experience of attending a final dress rehearsal at the Metropolitan Opera.
The Metropolitan Opera is a vibrant home for the most creative and talented singers, conductors, composers, musicians, stage directors, designers, visual artists, choreographers, and dancers from around the world. Founded in 1883, the Met first opened on Broadway and 39th Street, in a lavish opera house built by a group of wealthy businessmen who wanted their own theater.

Almost from the beginning, it was clear that limited stage facilities of the opera house on 39th Street could not meet the Met’s technical needs. But it was not until the Met joined with other New York institutions in forming Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts that a new home became possible. The new Metropolitan Opera House, which opened at Lincoln Center in September of 1966, was equipped with the finest technical facilities of the day.

Each season, the Met stages more than 200 opera performances in New York, and more than 800,000 people attend the performances in the opera house during the season. In addition, the Met is a leader in new media distribution initiatives, harnessing state-of-the-art technology to bring performances from the Met’s iconic stage to millions of people around the globe.

This guide is intended to cultivate students’ interest in The Magic Flute, whether or not they have any prior acquaintance with opera or the performing arts. It includes activities for students with a wide range of musical backgrounds and will encourage them to think about opera—and the performing arts as a whole—as a medium of both entertainment and creative expression.

In particular, this guide offers in-depth introductions to:

- The opera’s context in the writings of the European Enlightenment
- The aria as a vehicle for personal expression
- Creative choices made by the artists of the Metropolitan Opera for this production
- The opera as a unified work of art, involving the efforts of composer, librettist, and Met artists
THE STORY

SUMMARY

Prince Tamino is pursued by a giant serpent and collapses in fear. While he is unconscious, three ladies in the service of the Queen of the Night slay the serpent, then depart to tell their mistress about Tamino. The birdcatcher Papageno enters and claims that he killed the serpent. The ladies return and show Tamino a portrait of the queen’s daughter, Pamina, who has been abducted by the evil sorcerer Sarastro. Tamino falls in love with her at first sight. The queen arrives and charges Tamino with rescuing Pamina. He receives a magic flute to help him on his way, while Papageno receives magic bells. Three wise spirits will also help guide them on their mission.

In his search for Pamina at Sarastro’s temple, Tamino soon learns that it is the queen who is evil, not Sarastro. Sarastro promises to release Pamina, but first Tamino must go through a series of tests. Together with Papageno, Tamino begins his trials. Meanwhile, the Queen of the Night appears, giving Pamina a dagger and insisting that she kill Sarastro. After Papageno becomes distracted from his tests, an old lady appears and flirts with him. Although he would prefer a better match, he eventually agrees to be faithful to her. The old lady is suddenly transformed into the beautiful Papagena, but then disappears.

Tamino continues his trials with Pamina at his side. Together, they prevail over the tests of fire and water. Tamino’s magic flute helps protect them. The Queen of the Night and her servants are defeated. Tamino and Pamina, Papageno and Papagena, and Sarastro, along with his whole court, celebrate the triumph of virtue.

THE SOURCES

Emanuel Schikaneder—impresario, writer, actor, and singer—drew from a variety of sources in crafting the libretto for Die Zauberflöte (The Magic Flute). Influences include Arthurian romance as well as more contemporary works such as a short story by the poet Christoph Martin Wieland in the 1780s that features a fairy who enlists a prince to rescue a young maiden, giving him a magic flute to help him along his way, and an essay on Egyptian mysteries by Vienna’s foremost Freemason, Ignaz von Born.

Schikaneder also drew from the performance history of Viennese popular theater, which embraced magic, lowbrow humor, mystery, spectacle, and moralizing sentiments. Its tradition also provided a model for the character of Papageno in the stock role of Hanswurst (“Jack Sausage”), a crafty but coarse type who usually falls prey to his baser instincts and provides much of the comic relief.
SYNOPSIS

A mythical land between the sun and the moon. Three ladies in the service of the Queen of the Night save Prince Tamino from a serpent. When they leave to tell the queen, the birdcatcher Papageno appears. He boasts to Tamino that it was he who killed the creature. The ladies return to give Tamino a portrait of the queen’s daughter, Pamina, who they say has been enslaved by the evil Sarastro. Tamino immediately falls in love with the girl’s picture. The queen, appearing in a burst of thunder, tells Tamino about the loss of her daughter and commands him to rescue her. The ladies give a magic flute to Tamino and silver bells to Papageno to ensure their safety on the journey and appoint three spirits to guide them.

Sarastro’s slave Monostatos pursues Pamina but is frightened away by Papageno. The birdcatcher tells Pamina that Tamino loves her and is on his way to save her. Led by the three spirits to the temple of Sarastro, Tamino learns from a high priest that it is the queen, not Sarastro, who is evil. Hearing that Pamina is safe, Tamino uses his flute to charm the wild animals who threaten him, then rushes off to follow the sound of Papageno’s pipes. Monostatos and his men chase Papageno and Pamina but are charmed into submission when Papageno plays his magic bells. Sarastro enters in great ceremony. He punishes Monostatos and promises Pamina that he will eventually set her free. Pamina catches a glimpse of Tamino, who is led into the temple with Papageno.

Sarastro tells the priests that Tamino will undergo initiation rites. Monostatos tries to kiss the sleeping Pamina but is surprised by the appearance of the Queen of the Night. The queen gives her daughter a dagger and orders her to murder Sarastro.
Sarastro finds the desperate Pamina and consoles her, explaining that he is not interested in vengeance. Tamino and Papageno are told by a priest that they must remain silent and are not allowed to eat, a vow that Papageno immediately breaks when he takes a glass of water from a flirtatious old lady. When he asks her name, she vanishes. The three spirits guide Tamino through the rest of his journey and tell Papageno to be quiet. Tamino remains silent even when Pamina appears. Misunderstanding his action for coldness, she is heartbroken.

The priests inform Tamino that he has only two more trials to complete his initiation. Papageno, who has given up on entering the brotherhood, longs for a wife instead. He eventually settles for the old lady. When he promises to be faithful, she is suddenly transformed into the beautiful young Papagena but then immediately disappears. Pamina and Tamino are reunited and face the ordeals of water and fire together, protected by the magic flute.

Desolate to be without a wife, Papageno tries to hang himself on a tree but is saved by the three spirits, who remind him that if he uses his magic bells he will find true happiness. When he plays the bells, Papagena appears and the two immediately start making family plans. The Queen of the Night, her three ladies, and Monostatos attack the temple but are defeated and banished. Sarastro blesses Pamina and Tamino as all join in celebrating the triumph of courage, virtue, and wisdom.

VOICE TYPES

Since the early 19th century, singing voices have usually been classified into six basic types, three male and three female, according to their range:

SOPRANO the highest voice type, normally possessed only by women and boys

MEZZO-SOPRANO the voice type lying below the soprano and above the contralto; the term comes from the Italian word “mezzo,” meaning “middle”

CONTRALTO the lowest female voice type, also called “alto”

TENOR the highest standard voice type in adult males

BARITONE the voice type lying below the tenor and above the bass

BASS the lowest voice type

1756  Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart is born on January 27, one of two surviving children of Leopold Mozart, a composer in the service of the Prince-Archbishop of Salzburg.

1762  At the age of seven, Mozart performs for the Empress Maria Theresia in Vienna, as a keyboard prodigy and composer. Over the next 11 years, the Mozart family tours throughout Europe, performing for members of the royalty and nobility.

1767  Mozart completes his first full-length dramatic work, Apollo et Hyacinthus, based on a Latin text drawn from Ovid. It is first performed in Salzburg on May 13.

1776  Emperor Joseph II dismisses the impresario of the Burgtheater, one of the two imperial court theaters in Vienna, and re-opens it as the “Nationaltheater,” the home of German drama. Two years later, Joseph founds the National-Singspiel, intended to encourage the composition of music dramas in German. Mozart’s Die Entführung aus dem Serail (1782) is the most successful of the singspiels created for the Burgtheater before the failure of the National-Singspiel in 1788.

1781  Mozart relocates to Vienna, seeking to make his living as an independent composer and performer in the culturally rich Habsburg capital, rather than solely under contract to a wealthy patron or the Church.

1784  Mozart becomes a Freemason and joins the Viennese lodge “Zur Wohltätigkeit” (“Beneficence”), a community of liberal intellectuals whose philosophical interests aligned closely with the Enlightenment concerns of reason, nature, and the universal brotherhood of fellow men.
1786 Mozart completes Le Nozze di Figaro, the first of his collaborations with the librettist Lorenzo Da Ponte (followed by Don Giovanni in 1787 and Così fan tutte in 1790). The three works, masterpieces of dramatic structure and musical expression, number among the pinnacles of the opera buffa genre.

1787–89 The German poet Christoph Martin Wieland publishes Dschinnistan, a collection of stories, several of which inspire the plot of Die Zauberflöte, notably “Lulu, oder Die Zauberflöte,” which tells the story of Prince Lulu, who is enlisted by a “radiant fairy” to rescue a maiden who has been captured by an evil sorcerer, and who is provided with a magic flute to help him in his mission.

1789 The actor, librettist, and theatrical producer Emanuel Schikaneder takes over the direction of the Freihaus-Theater auf der Wieden in Vienna. His repertory includes musical dramas (mostly comprising singspiels), spoken plays with spectacular staging effects, as well as works by serious German dramatists. The theater’s audience bridges the different classes of Viennese society.

1791 Die Zauberflöte premieres on September 30 at the Theater auf der Wieden, with Schikaneder performing the role of Papageno and Mozart conducting. The opera receives 20 performances by the end of the following month and more than 200 performances by 1800.

1791 Mozart falls ill on November 22 and dies on December 5, likely from rheumatic fever.
MOZART AND FREEMASONRY

A fraternal organization whose members are committed to ideals of morality, justice, and reason, Freemasonry originally grew out of the medieval guilds of stonemasons and the study of the philosophical aspects of math and architecture. Among the central ideas of Masonic thought and practice are the exploration of the nature of man and society and a quasi-religious ritualism and mysticism. From its initial popularity in England, the movement had spread across the European continent by the early 18th century.

The first Masonic lodge in Vienna was founded in 1742, and within 40 years, another lodge, “Zur wahren Eintracht” (“True Concord”), had become the foremost community of Viennese artistic, scientific, and literary thinkers. Mozart joined its smaller sister lodge “Zur Wohltätigkeit” (“Beneficence”) in 1784. From his letters, it is evident that Freemasonry played a large role in Mozart’s life, and he composed several works for use with Masonic rituals (including the cantatas Dir, Seele des Weltalls and Die Maurerfreude) as well as many more that more generally allude to Masonic symbolism or ideals. Within his lodge, Mozart also found friends and supporters who assisted him financially, with both gifts and commissions for compositions.

Of all his works, the one most frequently associated with Masonic sentiments is Die Zauberflöte. Its evocation of ancient Egypt aligns with Masonic interests, and it prominently uses the number three, which held special significance in Freemasonry: the opera includes Three Ladies as attendants to the Queen of the Night, Three Spirits, three trials that Tamino must endure, a prominent musical motive built from three chords, and a significant role for the key of E-flat major (indicated in music notation by three flats). Although Masonic influences are only one aspect of Die Zauberflöte, the opera demonstrates the interests of Viennese Freemasonry in its semi-religious program of enlightenment and progress.

The Guided Listening Activities are designed to introduce students to a selection of memorable moments from the opera. They include information on what is happening dramatically, a description of the musical style, and a roadmap of musical features to listen for. Guided Listening Activities can be used by students and teachers of varying levels of musical experience.

“I’m Papageno, That’s My Name”
Close to the opening of the opera, the Three Ladies have just killed the giant serpent while Prince Tamino lays nearby, unconscious. After bickering over who will have the privilege of watching over the prince, they all depart together to report back to the Queen of the Night. As Tamino awakens, the birdcatcher Papageno appears and introduces himself with this song.

WHAT TO LISTEN FOR:
• The simple, folk-like style of Papageno’s singing
• The musical representation of Papageno’s pipe

(00:00) The orchestra plays an introduction, with the melody in the violins against a light, running accompaniment. The tempo is brisk; the music is set in the major mode, and the tone is folk like. Notice the first occurrences of a brief, rising five-note scale.

(00:42) The voice enters, singing the same melody just heard in the orchestra introduction. As in the introduction, the range of the melody is narrow, and music is largely stepwise. The rhythm is similarly simple.

(01:06) At the close of the first verse, Papageno plays his pipes. Usually, the performer playing Papageno plays the music using a small wind instrument from the stage.

(01:22) The second verse begins with a new text. The music proceeds in an exact repetition of the music heard before.
“This Portrait’s Beauty I Adore”

Papageno and Tamino have just met one another, and Papageno takes credit for having slain the serpent. When the Three Ladies appear again, they punish Papageno for this lie by padlocking his mouth. They also give a portrait to Tamino: It is a gift from the Queen of the Night, a picture of her daughter, Pamina. And just as suddenly as they appeared, they depart again, leaving Tamino to contemplate the beautiful girl in the portrait.

WHAT TO LISTEN FOR:
• Tamino’s long, elegant melodies, a marked contrast to Papageno’s simple lines
• An emphasis on lush string orchestration rather than the brighter timbres of woodwinds typical of Papageno’s arias.

(00:00) After a brief introductory gesture in the orchestra, the voice enters with a large leap, followed by a graceful scale downwards. Tamino’s music is graceful and elevated sounding; the tempo is slow and stately.

(00:35) Tamino continues with the next line of his text, “If so, to true love I yield.” He sings several notes to each syllable of text, another contrast to Papageno’s musical style, which invariably sets a note per syllable.

(00:58) Extending his final lines, Tamino’s vocal leaps convey the emotional exclamations in the text.
“O Isis and Osiris”

After learning of Monastatos’s bad behavior, Sarastro has punished him and pledged that Tamino and Pamina shall be together, but Tamino must first undergo initiation rites in the temple. Together with Papageno, he is led into the temple, and Sarastro responds with a prayer, entrusting them to the care of the Egyptian gods Isis and Osiris.

WHAT TO LISTEN FOR:
- The slow and solemn tempo, corresponding to the meaning of the text
- The predominance of wind instruments in the instrumental texture

(00:00) The orchestra, led by winds, intones an introductory phrase that establishes the stately and slow atmosphere of the song.
(00:11) The voice enters with the text, “O Isis and Osiris, guide them as they now make their dangerous way.” The music is solemn, with consistent and smooth rhythms in the vocal line.
(00:56) In this repetition of the text “Protect them both from harm, we pray,” the melody extends into the lowest reaches of the bass vocal range.
(01:07) The chorus repeats Sarastro’s line, now in harmony.
(01:19) Sarastro begins a new, contrasting section, with music initially in the minor mode and in a higher section of his vocal range.
(01:42) Sarastro begins his final petition, “think of their virtue, their tender hearts; Your everlasting peace impart.” Ascending melodic patterns grant the music a supplicatory tone.
(02:18) The chorus responds one final time, repeating Sarastro’s final line.
“Here in My Heart, Hell’s Bitterness is Seething”

The Queen of the Night is one of the most famously difficult roles in all of opera. It requires a soprano with a powerful and high range, but also with great agility and the capability to perform highly virtuosic coloratura. A great example of the demands made on the singer is the Queen’s aria “Here in My Heart, Hell’s Bitterness is Seething” (usually referred to in German as “Der Hölle Rache”). In this scene, the Queen pushes Pamina to kill Sarastro, or else be disowned. The Queen moves through increasing flights of ornamentation and stratospheric high notes, with her frenzied virtuosity making it explicit that she is not the benevolent, mournful character she initially presented herself as.

WHAT TO LISTEN FOR:

- The extremely high vocal range
- The rapid, angry fast passages in the voice

(00:00) The orchestra enters with an aggressive, tremolo gesture. The voice follows and continues in this vein, with jagged movement, large leaps, and angry gestures in the minor mode.

(00:18) At the text “If you refuse,” the melody modulates to the major mode, although the aggressive texture remains.

(00:42) The most virtuosic vocal music of the work begins, on an extended melisma—in which many notes are set to the same syllable of text.

(01:31) A contrasting section begins, beginning at the text “Sarastro once betrayed me.” The Queen’s music is incisive, outlining an octave with staccato accents.

(01:47) The Queen repeats this musical gesture at a higher pitch, now to the text “Abandoned, forsaken, and tormented.”

(01:58) The Queen sings another lavishly virtuosic melisma, here to the repetition of “his dominion I defy.”

(02:36) The final section of the aria begins, with aggressive chords in the orchestra and incisive statements in the voice, as the Queen states, “Swear to avenge me; swear or you will die.” The aria ends with a closing, angry orchestral flourish.
ENCOURAGING STUDENT RESPONSE IN ATTENDING THE FINAL DRESS REHEARSAL

Watching and listening to a performance is a unique experience that takes students beyond the printed page to an immersion in images, sound, interpretation, technology, drama, skill, and craft. This performance activity will help students analyze different aspects of the experience, engage critically with the performance, and express their views in a respectful and supported environment.

The enclosed performance activity is called “Opera Review: The Magic Flute.” The reproducible handout for this activity, available at the back of this guide, will invite students to think of themselves as opera critics, taking notes on what they see and hear during the performance and critiquing each scene on a five-star scale. Students should bring this activity sheet to the final dress rehearsal and fill it out after the final curtain. When they return to class, students can use their “Opera Review” sheets as they review and discuss their experience.

FOLLOW-UP DISCUSSION

Students will enjoy starting the class with an open discussion of the Met performance. What did they like? What didn’t they? Did anything surprise them? What would they like to see or hear again? What would they have done differently?

A central aspect of the plot of The Magic Flute is the revelation that the Queen of the Night is not an innocent grieving mother, and Sarastro is not an evil sorcerer—that, in fact, their roles are reversed. Students may enjoy discussing their initial impressions of these characters and how convincing they found them. You may prompt them with the following questions:

- Was the Queen of the Night believable when she first appeared in the opera? Was there anything about her music, the staging, or the costume design that hinted at her true nature?
- When did you first begin to doubt that Sarastro was an evil character? What helped convince you?
- Do you think there was a significant difference between the music and design of the Queen of the Night early in the opera compared to her later appearances?
- Alternatively, do you think the shift in roles (good vs. evil) was ineffective? Do you think the opera would have been stronger dramatically if there were no shift?

Aria
A self-contained piece for solo voice, typically with orchestral accompaniment. Arias form a major part of larger works such as operas or oratorios.

Basset Horn
An alto clarinet with an extended lower range. Like the clarinet, the basset horn possesses a dark, velvety timbre. While it was not a common orchestral instrument, Mozart used it prominently in some of his compositions, notably those with Masonic associations.

Coloratura
From the Italian word for “coloring,” “coloratura” refers to florid, elaborate vocal passages with heavy ornamentation. It may also describe a voice type or singer who possesses the agility and lightness necessary to perform such music.

Glockenspiel
A percussion instrument made of tuned metal bars that are struck with a mallet, producing a bell-like sound. In The Magic Flute, the music of Papageno’s magical bells is created by a glockenspiel. The type of glockenspiel Mozart calls for is played using a keyboard similar to a piano.

Legato and Staccato
The term “legato” comes from the Italian word for “to tie together.” It is used in music to describe a series of notes that are played or sung with smooth connection from one note to the next. It is the opposite of “staccato,” an articulation in which notes are played in a short, detached manner.

Melisma
A group of several notes sung to the same syllable of text. Melismatic singing is the opposite of syllabic singing, in which a single note is sung to each syllable of the text. Melismas show off a singer’s breath control, vocal flexibility, and virtuosity. They can vary in length and complexity, often combining stepwise movement from note to note with larger, more difficult leaps.

Major and Minor
Western music written since around 1600 has been built on two basic tonal principles: major and minor. Although the terms can be used to describe scales, intervals, harmonies, or keys, in their most basic application they refer to the overarching tonal organization of a composition, or its mode. Pieces in the major mode typically sound bright, cheery, or optimistic, while pieces in the minor mode may sound somber, plaintive, or sinister.

Orchestraton
An aspect of composition, orchestraton is the art of choosing which instruments should play each musical idea in a musical work. Successful orchestraton requires that the instrument chosen is appropriate to the melody—that the musical line is within the instrument’s playable range and expressive capabilities. The art of orchestraton also allows a composer to draw on and combine the disparate timbres of instruments to amplify melodic expression and create a wide range of musical color. In The Magic Flute, Mozart often uses wind instruments to create a mellow, pastoral texture.

Singspiel
A German opera of the 18th or 19th century featuring musical numbers interspersed with spoken dialogue. A singspiel would often incorporate magical elements or stories from folklore. Mozart’s The Magic Flute is regarded as the pinnacle of the genre.

Tempo
Literally “time” in Italian, “tempo” refers to the speed of a piece of music. Tempo is indicated in a score by a variety of conventional (often Italian) words—such as allegro, adagio, vivace, moderato, grave, and many more—that not only provide direction on the composer’s desired rate of speed but also carry associations of gesture and character. For instance, “vivace” indicates not only a brisk speed but also a lively spirit. Additional tempo markings may indicate when a composer asks for a section of music to be sped up (such as “accelerando”) or slowed down (such as “rallentando”).
