Il Trovatore has it all—A Brave Hero, A Selfless Heroine, A Sinister Villain, Skeletons in the Family Closet, and Four Acts Brimming with Gloriously Passionate Music. It’s true that the story has been called absurd and impossibly confusing. It is the one work most often sent up whenever people are trying to make fun of opera. But Verdi’s score also contains some of the best-loved arias ever written.

Il Trovatore is an opera of extremes. It plunges listeners into a world turned upside down by jealousy and rage, love and war. Concerns about a confusing plot crumble in the face of David McVicar’s acclaimed Metropolitan Opera production, a staging that the New York Times called “clear-headed, psychologically insightful and fluid.” The extraordinary cast of the production’s 2009 premiere run reunites for this Live in HD presentation: Marcelo Álvarez stars in the title role of the troubadour Manrico, opposite Sondra Radvanovsky as his beloved Leonora. Dmitri Hvorostovsky sings the evil Count di Luna, and Dolora Zajick is the mysterious Azucena. The Met’s Music Director James Levine is on the podium.

This guide is designed to support students’ appreciation of Il Trovatore—to familiarize them with its subject and music, and to direct them toward the subtleties of a work that embodies the genre of opera like few others. The activities offer a detailed look both at Il Trovatore itself and at the artistic choices shaping this Metropolitan Opera Live in HD production.

---

The Work:

Il Trovatore

Music by Giuseppe Verdi (1813–1901)

An opera in four acts, sung in Italian

Libretto by Salvatore Cammarano, based on the play El Trovador by Antonio García Gutiérrez

First performed on January 19, 1853 at the Teatro Apollo, Rome, Italy

Production

James Levine, Conductor
David McVicar, Production
Charles Edwards, Set Designer
Brigitte Reifenstuel, Costume Designer
Lighting Designed by Jennifer Tipton
Leah Hausman, Choreographer

Starring

Sondra Radvanovsky (Leonora)
Dolora Zajick (Azucena)
Marcelo Álvarez (Manrico)
Dmitri Hvorostovsky (Count di Luna)
Stefan Kocán (Ferrando)
The guide includes four types of activities. Reproducible student resources for the activities are available at the back of this guide.

CLASSROOM ACTIVITY:
A full-length activity, designed to support your ongoing curriculum

MUSICAL HIGHLIGHTS:
opportunities to focus on excerpts from Il Trovatore to enhance familiarity with the work

PERFORMANCE ACTIVITIES:
to be used during The Met: Live in HD

POST-SHOW DISCUSSION:
A wrap-up activity, integrating the live in HD experience into students’ views of the performing arts and humanities

The activities in this guide address several aspects of Il Trovatore:
- the opera’s narrative structure
- the traditional musical forms Verdi uses and develops in the score
- the close integration of the music with Cammarano’s libretto
- the longstanding popularity of Il Trovatore’s melodies
- the opera’s history, reputation, and cultural influence
- the production as a unified work of art, involving creative decisions by the artists of the Metropolitan Opera

The guide is intended to cultivate students’ interest in Il Trovatore whether or not they have any prior acquaintance with opera. It includes activities for students with a wide range of musical backgrounds, seeking to encourage them to think about opera—and the performing arts in general—as a medium of entertainment and as creative expression.

---

Act I: The Duel

Scene I: Outside the palace of Count di Luna. Ferrando, an officer in Count di Luna’s army, is on night duty outside the Count’s apartments. He tells his men that the Count is in love with a noblewoman, Leonora, and fears his rival for her affections, a troubadour who sings nightly in the palace gardens.

At the soldiers’ request, Ferrando then relates a kind of ghost story—the sad tale of the Count’s younger brother. As an infant, the boy was believed to have been cursed by a gypsy witch (see the sidebar on page 4: The Romani People). The woman was pursued and burned at the stake. In retaliation, her daughter kidnapped the baby. Shortly thereafter, a child’s burnt body was found at the site where the witch had burned to death. The Count’s brother was never seen again. Di Luna has sworn to bring the gypsy’s daughter to justice (Tracks 31–35).

Scene II: In the palace gardens. Leonora, together with her confidante Ines, is waiting for the troubadour to appear. She tells Ines the story of her previous meeting, long ago, with the mysterious man. After civil war broke out between the kingdom and rebel forces, she never saw him again—until one day his voice rang out from the garden below her balcony (Tracks 1–3).

The story disturbs Ines, who begs Leonora to forget the man (Track 4). Leonora replies that she is unable to. If she can’t live for him, she will die for him (Tracks 5–7). They return to Leonora’s chambers.

Count di Luna appears, intending to visit Leonora in her apartment. He hesitates when he hears the troubadour’s song in the distance. Leonora has heard it, too, and rushes in. In the dark, she mistakes the Count for the troubadour and greets him affectionately. When she realizes her mistake, the enraged Count demands that the troubadour identify himself. He is Manrico, commander of the rebel army. The Count challenges him to a duel, in spite of Leonora’s pleadings.

Act II: The Gypsy

Scene I: In the mountains of Biscay. Several weeks have passed. At dawn, a band of gypsies work at their anvils (Tracks 28–30). Among them are Manrico and his mother, Azucena. Azucena tells of a woman who was burned at the stake (Track 19). She cries out, “Avenge me! Avenge me!”—a phrase Manrico has heard before, but never understood (Track 20).

When the rest of the group head off, Manrico insists that Azucena at last tell him her story (Tracks 21–26). It is the story we heard from Ferrando in Act I, but now we learn that the woman burned at the stake was Manrico’s grandmother, Azucena’s mother. Azucena herself was the daughter who kidnapped the count’s baby brother. In the confusion of the moment, Azucena now reveals, she threw her own baby into the flames by mistake. So the count’s younger brother survived. Manrico is confused. Is it possible he is not Azucena’s son? She Replies that he is her son. She claims to have misspoken, overwhelmed by the horrible memory. She reminds him that she has always cared for him and loved him as a mother (Track 27).

---

PRONUNCIATION GUIDE

Manrico: “mah-nee-REE-co”
Azucena: “ah-DOO-nay-nah”
Leonora: “lay-oh-NO-rah”
Ferrando: “feh-RAHN-do”
Ines: “ee-NESS”
Ruiz: “roo-EASE”
Aliaferia: “ahl-yay-FAIR-ee-a”

Il Trovatore: “eel troh-voh-TOH-ray”—Italian for “the troubadour”
The guide includes four types of activities. Reproducible student resources for the activities are available at the back of this guide.

CLASSROOM ACTIVITY: a full-length activity, designed to support your ongoing curriculum

MUSICAL HIGHLIGHTS: opportunities to focus on excerpts from Il Trovatore to enhance familiarity with the work

PERFORMANCE ACTIVITIES: to be used during The Met: Live in HD

POST-SHOW DISCUSSION: a wrap-up activity, integrating the transmission, calling attention to specific aspects of this production

The guide includes four types of activities. Reproducible student resources for the activities are available at the back of this guide.

CLASSROOM ACTIVITY: a full-length activity, designed to support your ongoing curriculum

MUSICAL HIGHLIGHTS: opportunities to focus on excerpts from Il Trovatore to enhance familiarity with the work

PERFORMANCE ACTIVITIES: to be used during The Met: Live in HD

POST-SHOW DISCUSSION: a wrap-up activity, integrating the transmission, calling attention to specific aspects of this production

The activities in this guide address several aspects of Il Trovatore:
  - the opera’s narrative structure
  - the traditional musical forms Verdi uses and develops in the score
  - the close integration of the music with Cammarano’s libretto
  - the longstanding popularity of Il Trovatore’s melodies
  - the opera’s history, reputation, and cultural influence
  - the production as a unified work of art, involving creative decisions by the artists of the Metropolitan Opera

The guide is intended to cultivate students’ interest in Il Trovatore whether or not they have any prior acquaintance with opera. It includes activities for students with a wide range of musical backgrounds, seeking to encourage them to think about opera—and the performing arts in general—as a medium of entertainment and as creative expression.

Act I: The Duel Scene 1: Outside the palace of Count di Luna. Ferrando, an officer in Count di Luna’s army, is on night duty outside the Count’s apartments. He tells his men that the Count is in love with a noblewoman, Leonora, and fears his rival for her affections, a troubadour who sings nightly in the palace gardens.

At the soldiers’ request, Ferrando then relates a kind of ghost story—the sad tale of the Count’s younger brother. As an infant, the boy was believed to have been cursed by a gypsy witch (see the sidebar on page 4: The Romani People). The woman was pursued and burned at the stake. In retaliation, her daughter kidnapped the baby. Shortly thereafter, a child’s burnt body was found at the site where the witch had burned to death. The Count’s brother was never seen again. Di Luna has sworn to bring the gypsy’s daughter to justice (Tracks 31–35).

Scene 2: In the palace gardens. Leonora, together with her confidante Ines, is waiting for the troubadour to appear. She tells Ines the story of her previous meeting, long ago, with the mysterious man. After civil war broke out between the kingdom and rebel forces, she never saw him again—until one day his voice rang out from the garden below her balcony (Tracks 1–3).

The story disturbs Ines, who begs Leonora to forget the man (Track 4). Leonora replies that she is unable to. If she can’t live for him, she will die for him (Tracks 5–7). They return to Leonora’s chambers.

Count di Luna appears, intending to visit Leonora in her apartment. He hesitates when he hears the troubadour’s song in the distance. Leonora has heard it, too, and rushes in. In the dark, she mistakes the Count for the troubadour and greets him affectionately. When she realizes her mistake, the enraged Count demands that the troubadour identify himself. He is Manrico, commander of the rebel army. The Count challenges him to a duel, in spite of Leonora’s pleadings.

Act II: The Gypsy Scene 1: In the mountains of Biscay. Several weeks have passed. At dawn, a band of gypsies work at their anvils (Tracks 28–30). Among them are Manrico and his mother, Azucena. Azucena tells of a woman who was burned at the stake (Track 19). She cries out, “Avenge me! Avenge me!”—a phrase Manrico has heard before, but never understood (Track 20).

When the rest of the group head off, Manrico insists that Azucena at last tell him her story (Tracks 21–26). It is the story we heard from Ferrando in Act I, but now we learn that the woman burned at the stake was Manrico’s grandmother, Azucena’s mother. Azucena herself was the daughter who kidnapped the count’s baby brother. In the confusion of the moment, Azucena now reveals, she threw her own baby into the flames by mistake. So the count’s younger brother survived.

Manrico is confused. Is it possible he is not Azucena’s son? She replies that he is her son. She claims to have misspoken, overwhelmed by the horrible memory. She reminds him that she has always cared for him and loved him as a mother (Track 27).
Manrico's aide-de-camp, appears with news that an old gypsy woman has been captured by the Count's men and is about to be burned. Manrico tells Leonora that the gypsy is his mother. He leads his men to rescue her (tracks 15–18).

Act IV: The execution

Scene 1: The Count's palace. Manrico has been captured by di Luna's forces. Leonora and Ruiz arrive, hoping to rescue him. Ruiz departs. Leonora, alone, hears Manrico singing her a farewell from his cell in the tower. She vows to save his life or die (tracks 37–42).

The Count enters and finds Leonora. She pleads for mercy, but the Count's anger is inflamed by her love for the troubadour. He seeks vengeance. Leonora offers herself in exchange for Manrico's life. When di Luna accepts, she secretly swallows poison. They head off toward the tower prison.

Scene 2: The prison. Manrico and Azucena share a cell. Fearing that she will be burned at the stake as well, Azucena again recounts her mother's death. Manrico convinces her to rest. Leonora arrives, announcing that she has come to save Manrico, but he won't flee without her. He believes she has betrayed him by giving herself to the Count—until he realizes what she really has done and that she is dying. The Count enters and finds Leonora at death's door, sends Manrico off to be executed. Azucena reveals to the horrified Count that Manrico was his missing brother. Her mother is avenged.

THE ROMANI PEOPLE

If Trovatore, like many other musical and literary works of the 19th century, describes a fantastic, even dangerous band of wanderers known as “gypsies.” In the Act I aria “Abbiatta zingara” for instance, a gypsy woman is accused of witchcraft and blamed for causing a child's illness. These fictional gypsies perpetuate an unfortunate stereotype of the real-life gypsies, also known as the Romani people, or Roma—a nomadic ethnic minority living primarily in the nations of Europe.

In part, some people have been suspicious of the Roma because they maintain their own distinct language and culture. Because Romani culture includes fortune telling, Tarot-card reading, and small-scale commerce, and because Romani communities move from place to place, prejudice against the Roma has persisted for many centuries. They were targeted for extermination by Adolf Hitler and the Nazi Party during the Second World War. Yet over the years, Roma culture has also had a strong influence on European fashion, art, and especially music, inspiring both classical composers like Johannes Brahms and jazz greats like Django Reinhardt.

More information about the Roma and their lives in contemporary European society can be found at the Web site of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE)'s Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights.
Manrico recalls his fierce duel with Count di Luna. On the verge of victory, he could not bring himself to deal the fatal blow.

A messenger arrives, bearing two reports. The rebels have captured the stronghold of Castellar; Manrico is to hurry there and take charge. And Leonora, believing Manrico killed in battle, has decided to enter a convent. In spite of his mother’s pleas, Manrico rushes off to find Leonora.

Scene 2: At the convent. Count di Luna, Ferrando, and their soldiers quietly enter the convent. Believing Manrico dead, the count, too, intends to stop Leonora from taking her vows. Not even God, he vows, can steal his beloved from him (Tracks 8–12). Leonora enters and the Count emerges from hiding. Manrico appears. “Have you come down from heaven?” Leonora asks, “or am I in heaven with you?” Again the Count challenges Manrico, but his own soldiers convince him to stand down. Manrico and Leonora depart, leaving the Count and his men behind.

Act III: The Gypsy’s Son

Scene 1: The camp of the Count’s army. Ferrando and his soldiers prepare for battle. The Count is still obsessed with Leonora. Ferrando brings news that their scouts have captured a gypsy woman—Azucena. The Count interrogates her, asking whether she knows of a child kidnapped years before. He reveals himself as the kidnapped child’s brother and realizes that Azucena was the kidnapper—and killer. His men prepare to burn her at the stake.

Scene 2: In the fortress of Castellar. Manrico assures Leonora that the rebels will hold off the Count’s army and that they can get married at last (Tracks 13–14). Ruiz, Manrico’s aide-de-camp, appears with news that an old gypsy woman has been captured by the Count’s men and is about to be burned. Manrico tells Leonora that the gypsy is his mother. He leads his men to rescue her (Tracks 15–18).

THE ROMANI PEOPLE

Il Trovatore, like many other musical and literary works of the 19th century, describes a fantastic, even dangerous band of wanderers known as “gypsies.” In the Act I aria “Abbieta zingara” for instance, a gypsy woman is accused of witchcraft and blamed for causing a child’s illness. These fictional gypsies perpetuate an unfortunate stereotype of the real-life gypsy, also known as the Romani people, or Roma—a nomadic ethnic minority living primarily in the nations of Europe.

In part, some people have been suspicious of the Roma because they maintain their own distinct language and culture. Because Romani culture includes fortune telling, Tarot-card reading, and small-scale commerce, and because Romani communities move from place to place, prejudice against the Roma has persisted for many centuries. They were targeted for extermination by Adolf Hitler and the Nazi Party during the Second World War. Yet over the years, Roma culture has also had a strong influence on European fashion, art, and especially music, inspiring both classical composers like Johannes Brahms and jazz greats like Django Reinhardt.

More information about the Roma and their lives in contemporary European society can be found at the Web site of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE)’s Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights.
Backlit: A Close Look at Plot and Back Story in Il Trovatore

Verdi’s Il Trovatore has been both acclaimed as one of the most gripping operas in the repertoire and derided as ridiculous. The playwright George Bernard Shaw celebrated its “tragic power, poignant melancholy, impetuous vigor, and sweet and intense pathos,” yet warned that “if it allowed you to think for a moment, it would crumble into absurdity.” To a great extent, the controversy is rooted in a deceptively simple narrative involving characters blessed—or burdened—with an intricate back story.

This two-part classroom activity takes students on a journey through several key moments in Il Trovatore. In Part I, they will learn the basic structure and characteristics of the double-aria form while collecting evidence about the personalities and backgrounds of three main characters from their arias. Part I ends with a cliffhanger: the second part of Manrico’s aria (the so-called cabaletta) is held back until Part II.

In Part II, students will listen to the second half of Manrico’s aria, together with Azucena’s aria. This will prompt a re-examination of the story by introducing an element of back story which affects characters’ behavior and motivation. Students will:

• analyze the core plot of the opera
• listen critically to arias sung by each of the four main characters
• examine Verdi and Cammarano’s use of the double-aria form to establish and enrich their narrative
• formulate their own interpretations of events represented in key solos
• assess the effect a back story can have on the trajectory of a foreground plot
• create their own “double aria” presentations of elements of back story from familiar, contemporary tales

STEPS

Trying to summarize the tale of Il Trovatore can be daunting. From one perspective, audiences are launched into the middle of a story that has been literally going on for generations: The opera’s inciting incident was perpetrated offstage and long ago by the grandmother of the title character. From another point of view, Verdi and Cammarano use the simplest of love triangles as a vehicle for two hours of unforgettable melody and thrilling performance—and they do it by relying on time-tested operatic conventions. This activity will help even students with no opera experience develop an analytic approach to the uses of form in Il Trovatore, grounded in their own experience with well-known stories from popular culture.

INSTRUCTIONAL SUMMARY

PART I: RECOGNIZING THE DOUBLE ARIA

Step 1. Activate prior knowledge in identifying the core plot of three familiar contemporary narratives: Star Wars, Harry Potter, and Spider-Man.

WHO’S WHO IN IL TROVATORE

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CHARACTER</th>
<th>VOICE TYPE</th>
<th>THE LOWDOWN</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Count di Luna</td>
<td>baritone</td>
<td>Di Luna is in love with Leonora. He realizes too late that Manrico is in fact his younger brother.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manrico</td>
<td>tenor</td>
<td>Manrico is also in love with Leonora. He was raised as the son of Azucena, but is actually the Count’s younger brother.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Azucena</td>
<td>mezzo-soprano</td>
<td>Azucena is Manrico’s mother—but not his biological mother! Azucena’s mother was burned at the stake years ago.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leonora</td>
<td>soprano</td>
<td>Leonora loves Manrico, but di Luna is also courting her.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ferrando</td>
<td>bass</td>
<td>Ferrando begins the opera by telling the all-important backstory.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ines</td>
<td>soprano</td>
<td>Ruiz Manrico’s aide tenor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>An old gypsy man</td>
<td>bass</td>
<td>A messenger tenor</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

IN PREPARATION

For this activity, students will need the reproducible resources available at the back of this guide.

You will also need the audio selections from Il Trovatore available online or on the accompanying CD.

CURRICULUM CONNECTIONS

Language Arts (Literature)

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

• to recognize distinctions and connections between core plot and back story in a complex narrative
• to consider the use of musical forms for enriching a simple narrative
• to analyze Verdi’s use of the double-aria form in Il Trovatore
• to interpret the narrative structure of Il Trovatore in the context of familiar, contemporary stories
WHO’S WHO IN IL TROVATORE

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CHARACTER</th>
<th>VOICE TYPE</th>
<th>THE LOWDOWN</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Count di Luna</td>
<td>baritone</td>
<td>Di Luna is in love with Leonora. He realizes too late that Manrico is in fact his younger brother.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manrico</td>
<td>tenor</td>
<td>Manrico is also in love with Leonora. He was raised as the son of Azucena, but is actually the Count’s younger brother.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Azucena</td>
<td>mezzo-soprano</td>
<td>Azucena is Manrico’s mother—but not his biological mother! Azucena’s mother was burned at the stake years ago.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leonora</td>
<td>soprano</td>
<td>Leonora loves Manrico, but di Luna is also courting her.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ferrando</td>
<td>bass</td>
<td>Ferrando begins the opera by telling the all-important backstory.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ines</td>
<td>soprano</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ruiz</td>
<td>tenor</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>An old gypsy man</td>
<td>bass</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A messenger</td>
<td>tenor</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CLASSROOM ACTIVITY

Backlit:
A Close Look at Plot and Back Story in Il Trovatore

Verdi’s Il Trovatore has been both acclaimed as one of the most gripping operas in the repertoire and derided as ridiculous. The playwright George Bernard Shaw celebrated its “tragic power, poignant melancholy, impetuous vigor, and… sweet and intense pathos,” yet warned that “If it allowed you to think for a moment, it would crumble into absurdity.” To a great extent, the controversy is rooted in a deceptively simple narrative involving characters blessed—or burdened—with an intricate back story.

This two-part classroom activity takes students on a journey through several key moments in Il Trovatore. In Part I, they will learn the basic structure and characteristics of the double-aria form while collecting evidence about the personalities and backgrounds of three main characters from their arias. Part I ends with a cliffhanger: the second part of Manrico’s aria (the so-called cabaletta) is held back until Part II.

In Part II, students will listen to the second half of Manrico’s aria, together with Azucena’s aria. This will prompt a re-examination of the story by introducing an element of back story which affects characters’ behavior and motivation. Students will:

• analyze the core plot of the opera
• listen critically to arias sung by each of the four main characters
• examine Verdi and Cammarano’s use of the double-aria form to establish and enrich their narrative
• formulate their own interpretations of events represented in key solos
• assess the effect a back story can have on the trajectory of a foreground plot
• create their own “double aria” presentations of elements of back story from familiar, contemporary tales

STEPS

Trying to summarize the tale of Il Trovatore can be daunting. From one perspective, audiences are launched into the middle of a story that has been literally going on for generations: The opera’s inciting incident was perpetrated offstage and long ago by the grandmother of the title character. From another point of view, Verdi and Cammarano use the simplest of love triangles as a vehicle for two hours of unforgettable melody and thrilling performance—and they do it by relying on time-tested operatic conventions. This activity will help even students with no opera experience develop an analytic approach to the uses of form in Il Trovatore, grounded in their own experience with well-known stories from popular culture.

INSTRUCTIONAL SUMMARY

PART I: RECOGNIZING THE DOUBLE ARIA

Step 1. Activate prior knowledge in identifying the core plot of three familiar contemporary narratives: Star Wars, Harry Potter, and Spider-Man.

IN PREPARATION

For this activity, students will need the reproducible resources available at the back of this guide.

You will also need the audio selections from Il Trovatore available online or on the accompanying CD.

CURRICULUM CONNECTIONS

Language Arts (Literature)

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

• to recognize distinctions and connections between core plot and back story in a complex narrative
• to consider the use of musical forms for enriching a simple narrative
• to analyze Verdi’s use of the double-aria form in Il Trovatore
• to interpret the narrative structure of Il Trovatore in the context of familiar, contemporary stories
Step 2: Introduce the similarly simple core plot of Il Trovatore, identifying representational moments in the opera.

Step 3: Introduce the use of arias to amplify characterizations and enrich narrative.

Step 4: Introduce specific characteristics of the double-aria form.

Step 5: Listen critically to Leonora’s, Count di Luna’s, and Manrico’s arias. Detailed Listening Guides are provided to help you prepare, but you needn’t point out every detail if that is not appropriate for your students. Key takeaways are:

a. Leonora has a traditional double aria providing back story about her love for Manrico.

b. Count di Luna has a traditional double aria offering no back story, but considerable information about his personality.

c. Manrico’s double aria has a traditional structure, with an important difference between the first part (cavatina), included in Part I, and the second (cabaletta), which is held back until Part II.

PART II: TWEAKING THE DOUBLE ARIA

Step 6: Review concepts from Part I.

Step 7: Activate prior knowledge by considering the effects of back story on Star Wars, Harry Potter, and Spider-Man.

Steps 8–10. Listen critically to Manrico’s and Azucena’s arias. Key takeaways are:

a. The conclusion of Manrico’s double aria (a so-called cabaletta) reveals the conflict between his love for his mother and his love for Leonora.

b. Though Azucena’s aria shares a structure with the others, its musical styles are different. The first part of her aria is referred to as a canzone and the second as a narrative aria.

c. Azucena’s aria, including several moments of dialogue with Manrico, introduces an important element of back story. This information, delivered in Act II, affects the meaning of events later in the opera.

Steps 11–12. Compare Il Trovatore with the contemporary narratives to reinforce the concept of a relationship between core plot and back story.

PART I: RECOGNIZING THE DOUBLE ARIA

Step 1: Distribute the reproducible “Good Guys and Bad Guys.” To your students, this activity may seem both easy and unconnected to 19th-century opera. Nevertheless, it will help them construct a frame with which to make sense of Il Trovatore.

All they need to do is look down the list of names on the lower part of the reproducible and use them to fill in the chart above—correctly associating the good guys and bad guys in three famous narratives (Star Wars, Harry Potter, and the first Spider-Man film). Then, in as few words as possible, they should jot down the basic plot of each of these narratives under the heading “What happens?” For example:

- Luke Skywalker and Princess Leia defeat Darth Vader to save the Republic.
- Harry Potter fights Lord Voldemort to the death to protect the world.
- Spider-Man ends a crime wave by vanquishing the Green Goblin.

Point out that there are more rows and columns on the chart than they need right now. They will be filling these in later.

It’s possible that a student might at this point refer to Darth Vader as Luke and Leia’s father, to the fact that Voldemort killed Harry Potter’s parents, or to the Green Goblin’s uncostumed identity as Peter Parker/Spider-Man’s best friend, Harry Osborn. If so, acknowledge that they’re correct and ask them to hold onto that thought. It will become important information in Part II.

Step 2: Have a few students present their simple plot descriptions. These will serve as examples of the observation that many complicated tales have an essentially simple core plot. Point out that Il Trovatore is such a work, and that, as a group, the class will examine why so many people nonetheless find it complicated.

Step 3: Lay out the core plot of Il Trovatore, much the way the character Ferrando does in the opera’s very first scene. Five big ideas drive the plot, of which Ferrando states four (See Musical Highlight: Ghost Story):

1. Count di Luna loves Leonora.
3. Leonora loves Manrico.
4. The Count hates and fears Manrico—and wants him dead.

Almost all the action of Il Trovatore is explained by these four ideas. But the implications of that action are substantially explained by a fifth big idea, which will emerge at the end of Part I.

5. Manrico loves his mother.

The first four main ideas underlie the second scenes in each of the opera’s four acts.

IL TROVATORE PARODIES

The plot of Il Trovatore has inspired both parodies and other works based on a similar premise. The opera sparked a spate of switched-at-a-young-age stories during the late 19th century, ranging from Mark Twain’s The Prince and the Pauper to several comic operas by Gilbert and Sullivan. In The Pirates of Penzance, Gilbert and Sullivan not only borrowed the lifelong-mistaken-identity theme, but also adapted the melody of Verdi’s Anvil Chorus in the pirates’ chorus “With Catlike Tread.”

One of the most famous spoofs didn’t change a note of Il Trovatore. In the climactic scene of their 1935 film A Night at the Opera, the Marx Brothers run wild and wisecracking through an opening night performance of Verdi’s work. It begins with the overture, continues through the Anvil Chorus (see Musical Highlight: Hail Hail the Gypsy Band), and concludes with the first part of the Miserere (see Musical Highlight: Merciful Hit).
Since the early 19th century, singing voices have usually been classified in six basic types, three male and three female, according to their range:

- Soprano - the highest-pitched general type of human voice, normally possessed only by women and boys
- Mezzo-Soprano - the female voice whose range lies between the soprano and the contralto (Italian “mezzo” = middle, medium)
- Contralto - the lowest female voice, also called an alto
- Tenor - the highest naturally occurring voice type in adult males
- Baritone - the male voice lying below the tenor and above the bass
- Bass - the lowest sounding male voice

Voice Type

Soprano
- Normally possessed only by women and boys

Mezzo-Soprano
- Italian “mezzo” = middle, medium

Contralto
- The lowest female voice, also called an alto

Tenor
- Naturally occurring voice type in adult males

Baritone
- Male voice lying below the tenor and above the bass

Bass
- Lowest sounding male voice

---

Tip

It’s possible that a student might at this point refer to Darth Vader as Luke and Leia’s father, to the fact that Voldemort killed Harry Potter’s parents, or to the Green Goblin’s uncostumed identity as the father of Peter Parker/Spider-Man’s best friend, Harry Osborn. If so, acknowledge that they’re correct and ask them to hold onto that thought. It will become important information in Part II.

Step 2: Have a few students present their simple plot descriptions. These will serve as examples of the observation that many complicated tales have an essentially simple core plot. Point out that if Trovatore is such a work, and that, as a group, the class will examine why so many people nonetheless find it complicated.

Step 3: Lay out the core plot of Il Trovatore, much the way the character Ferrando does in the opera’s very first scene. Five big ideas drive the plot, of which Ferrando states four (See Musical Highlight: Ghost Story):

1. Count di Luna loves Leonora.
2. Manrico loves Leonora.
3. Leonora loves Manrico.
4. The Count hates and fears Manrico—and wants him dead.

Almost all the action of Il Trovatore is explained by these four ideas. But the implications of that action are substantially explained by a fifth big idea, which will emerge at the end of Part I.

5. Manrico loves his mother.

The first four main ideas underlie the second scenes in each of the opera’s four acts.

---

PART I: RECOGNIZING THE DOUBLE ARIA

Step 1: Distribute the reproducible “Good Guys and Bad Guys.” To your students, this activity may seem both easy and unconnected to 19th-century opera. Nevertheless, it will help them construct a frame with which to make sense of Il Trovatore.

Step 2: Introduce the similarly simple core plot of Il Trovatore, identifying representative moments in the opera.

Step 3: Introduce the use of arias to amplify characterizations and enrich narrative.

Step 4: Introduce specific characteristics of the double-aria form.

Step 5: Listen critically to Leonora’s, Count di Luna’s, and Manrico’s arias. Detailed Listening Guides are provided to help you prepare, but you needn’t point out every detail if that is not appropriate for your students. Key takeaways are:

- a. Leonora has a traditional double aria providing back story about her love for Manrico.
- b. Count di Luna has a traditional double aria offering no back story, but considerable information about his personality.
- c. Manrico’s double aria has a traditional structure, with an important difference between the first part (cavatina), included in Part I, and the second (cabaletta), which is held back until Part II.

PART II: TWEAKING THE DOUBLE ARIA

Step 6: Review concepts from Part I.

Step 7: Activate prior knowledge by considering the effects of back story on Star Wars, Harry Potter, and Spider-Man.

Steps 8–10: Listen critically to Manrico’s and Azucena’s arias. Key takeaways are:

- a. The conclusion of Manrico’s double aria (a so-called cabaletta) reveals the conflict between his love for his mother and his love for Leonora.
- b. Though Azucena’s aria shares a structure with the others, its musical style is different. The first part of her aria is referred to as a canzone and the second as a narrative aria.
- c. Azucena’s aria, including several moments of dialogue with Manrico, introduces an important element of back story. This information, delivered in Act II, affects the meaning of events later in the opera.

Steps 11–12: Compare Il Trovatore with the contemporary narratives to reinforce the concept of a relationship between core plot and back story.

---

IL TROVATORE PARODIES

The plot of Il Trovatore has inspired both parodies and other works based on a similar premise. The opera sparked a spate of switched-at-a-young-age stories during the late 19th century, ranging from Mark Twain’s The Prince and the Pauper to several comic operas by Gilbert and Sullivan. In The Pirates of Penzance, Gilbert and Sullivan not only borrowed the lifelong-mistaken-identity theme, but also adapted the melody of Verdi’s Anvil Chorus in the pirates’ chorus “With Catlike Tread.”

One of the most famous spoofs didn’t change a note of Il Trovatore. In the climactic scene of their 1935 film A Night at the Opera, the Marx Brothers run wild and wisecracking through an opening night performance of Verdi’s work. It begins with the overture, continues through the Anvil Chorus (see Musical Highlight: Hail Hail the Gypsy Band), and concludes with the first part of the Miserere (see Musical Highlight: Merciful Hit).
• In Act I, Scene 2, the Count and Manrico both show up at Leonora’s home at the same time, and the Count challenges Manrico to a duel.
• In Act II, Scene 2, believing her beloved Manrico dead, Leonora has decided to enter a convent. Again, the Count and Manrico show up. Again the Count challenges Manrico to a duel. This time, his own soldiers dissuade him.
• In Act III, Scene 2, Count di Luna doesn’t appear, but as the scene ends, Manrico leaves Leonora… to go fight the Count.
• In Act IV, Scene 2, infuriated that Leonora still loves Manrico, the Count has him beheaded.

Step 4: Obviously there’s a lot more to Il Trovatore than this. As students might guess, much of it emerges in the first scenes of each of the acts.

Most of the opera’s major arias, however, are placed in the second scenes. Arias are the self-contained solo numbers of the main characters that reveal their thoughts, their feelings, and especially in Il Trovatore, their memories.

In Il Trovatore, Verdi and Cammarano continued a tradition of “double arias,” a form whose two main parts are known as the cavatina (“cah-vah-TEEN-ah”) and the cabaletta (“kah-bah-LET-tah”).

- The double-aria form begins with a brief introductory passage, sometimes involving more than one character.
- Next, the key character sings a cavatina—a moderately paced, simple song, often pensive, generally expressing deep internal feeling.
- A brief tempo di mezzo (“TEM-po dee MET-zo”), or middle section, follows, during which some event or comment affects the mood of the scene.
- The key character then sings his or her cabaletta—a rhythmically animated section, often in faster tempo, with internal reprises and more vocal ornamentation.
- Often, toward the end of the cabaletta, another character or the chorus joins in, sometimes expressing a contradictory thought or feeling.

This double-aria form appears again and again in Il Trovatore. Some examples involve notable variation—a change in the pattern that conveys meaning. In the next step, students will listen closely to double arias sung by Leonora, Count di Luna, and Manrico in the second scenes of Acts I, II, and III, respectively. They’ll become familiar with the double-aria form, they’ll learn to recognize ways in which Verdi plays with the pattern to enrich the musical language—and they’ll figure out the fifth big idea.

Step 5: Here, students will listen critically to arias sung by Leonora and the Count and to the first half of an aria sung by Manrico. Listening Guides follow.

In each case, distribute the appropriate reproducible found at the back of this guide and have students follow along as they listen to the track. Invite them to listen for clues in the track, musical effects that might carry information. (Many of these are noted in the Listening Guides.) They can take notes in the space provided on the reproducible.

LISTENING GUIDE FOR THE REPRODUCIBLE
“LEONORA’S ARIA”

Introduction This double aria provides a classic example of the form. The introductory section, Track 1, sets up the story Leonora will tell in her cavatina. Strings throb as she recalls a mysterious warrior, dramatically accent her reference to his victory, then gently underscore her lasting memory. When her confidante, Ines, asks “Che avvenne?” (KAY ah-VEN-neh: “What happened?”), Verdi’s music blends the question dreamily into Leonora’s recollection, indicating that Ines is caught up in the tale. Verdi and Cammarano also use the question, together with Leonora’s response, “Ascolta.” (ah-SCOL-ta: “Listen”), to lead into the cavatina itself, Tracks 2 and 3.

Leonora’s cavatina, “Tacea la notte placida,” Act I, Scene 2 “Tacea la notte placida” (ta-CHAY-a lah NOT-teh PLA-chee-da: “It was silent in the peaceful night”), has become a standard in the concert repertoire. Leonora paints a typically romantic scene in the first stanza, Track 2. But notice how the track begins with dark, foreboding sounds in the orchestra. An ominous rhythm continues beneath luxuriously long lines of song, then transmutes into the gentle pulse of a waltz as Leonora describes the sweet, far-off strings of the troubadour’s lute. The simple rising melody carries listeners right into her recollection, culminating in an ecstatic memory of the troubadour.

In heralding the second stanza, Verdi brings back the same foreboding orchestral line, momentarily sweeping away the pleasant memory (Track 3). Again, Leonora’s voice rises in an animated waltz, although darkness intrudes, the briefest of warnings, at “Al core” (ahl KOH-reh:—“To my heart”), before she gives in with full voice to her dream. Your students may want to offer their thoughts on the decision to run a stream of darkness through so happy, hopeful a song. What might Verdi have had in mind?

Tempo di mezzo, Act I, Scene 2 Usually, in the tempo di mezzo, or middle section of a double aria, something happens that affects the mood of the scene. In this case, it’s Ines’s forceful response to Leonora’s reverie, underscored by frantic, worried strings (beginning of Track 4). Ines changes the subject from the unknown troubadour to Leonora herself. But Leonora won’t listen—“Oblialo!” (oh-blee-ARE-to: “Forget him?”). Impossible! Ines just doesn’t understand. With the lively cabaletta “Di tale amor” Leonora intends to explain.
• In Act I, Scene 2, the Count and Manrico both show up at Leonora’s home at the same time, and the Count challenges Manrico to a duel.
• In Act II, Scene 2, believing her beloved Manrico dead, Leonora has decided to enter a convent. Again, the Count and Manrico show up. Again the Count challenges Manrico to a duel. This time, his own soldiers dissuade him.
• In Act III, Scene 2, Count di Luna doesn’t appear, but as the scene ends, Manrico leaves Leonora… to go fight the Count.
• In Act IV, Scene 2, infuriated that Leonora still loves Manrico, the Count has him beheaded.

Step 4: Obviously there’s a lot more to Il Trovatore than this. As students might guess, much of it emerges in the first scenes of each of the acts.

Most of the opera’s major arias, however, are placed in the second scenes. Arias are the self-contained solo numbers of the main characters that reveal their thoughts, their feelings, and especially in Il Trovatore, their memories.

In Il Trovatore, Verdi and Cammarano continued a tradition of “double arias,” a form whose two main parts are known as the cavatina (“cah-vah-TEEN-ah”) and the cabaletta (“cah-bah-LET-tah”).

• The double-aria form begins with a brief introductory passage, sometimes involving more than one character.
• Next, the key character sings a cavatina—a moderately paced, simple song, often pensive, generally expressing deep internal feeling.
• A brief tempo di mezzo (“TEM-po dee MET-zo”), or middle section, follows, during which some event or comment affects the mood of the scene.
• The key character then sings his or her cabaletta—a rhythmically animated section, often in faster tempo, with internal reprises and more vocal ornamentation.

Often, toward the end of the cabaletta, another character or the chorus joins in, sometimes expressing a contradictory thought or feeling.

This double-aria form appears again and again in Il Trovatore. Some examples involve notable variation—a change in the pattern that conveys meaning. In the next step, students will listen closely to double arias sung by Leonora, Count di Luna, and Manrico in the second scenes of Acts I, II, and III, respectively. They’ll become familiar with the double-aria form, they’ll learn to recognize ways in which Verdi plays with the pattern to enrich the musical language—and they’ll figure out the fifth big idea.

Step 5: Here, students will listen critically to arias sung by Leonora and the Count and to the first half of an aria sung by Manrico. Listening Guides follow.

In each case, distribute the appropriate reproducible found at the back of this guide and have students follow along as they listen to the track. Invite them to listen for clues in the track, musical effects that might carry information. (Many of these are noted in the Listening Guides.) They can take notes in the space provided on the reproducible.

LISTENING GUIDE FOR THE REPRODUCIBLE
“LEONORA’S ARIA”

Introduction This double aria provides a classic example of the form. The introductory section, Track 1, sets up the story Leonora will tell in her cavatina. Strings throb as she recalls a mysterious warrior, dramatically accent her reference to his victory, then gently underscore her lasting memory. When her confidante, Ines, asks “Che avvenne?” (KAY ah-VEN-neh: “What happened?”), Verdi’s music blends the question dreamily into Leonora’s recollection, indicating that Ines is caught up in the tale. Verdi and Cammarano also use the question, together with Leonora’s response, “Ascolta.” (ah-SCOL-ta: “Listen”), to lead into the cavatina itself, Tracks 2 and 3.

Leonora’s cavatina, “Tacea la notte placida,” Act I, Scene 2 “Tacea la notte placida” (ta-CHAY-a lah NOT-teh PLA-chee-da: “It was silent in the peaceful night”), has become a standard in the concert repertoire. Leonora paints a typically romantic scene in the first stanza, Track 2. But notice how the track begins with dark, foreboding sounds in the orchestra. An ominous rhythm continues beneath luxuriously long lines of song, then transmutes into the gentle pulse of a waltz as Leonora describes the sweet, far-off strings of the troubadour’s lute. The simple rising melody carries listeners right into her recollection, culminating in an ecstatic memory of the troubadour.

In heralding the second stanza, Verdi brings back the same foreboding orchestral line, momentarily sweeping away the pleasant memory (Track 3). Again, Leonora’s voice rises in an animated waltz, although darkness intrudes, the briefest of warnings, at “Al core” (ahl KOH-reh—“To my heart”), before she gives in with full voice to her dream. Your students may want to offer their thoughts on the decision to run a stream of darkness through so happy, hopeful a song. What might Verdi have had in mind?

Tempo di mezzo, Act I, Scene 2 Usually, in the tempo di mezzo, or middle section of a double aria, something happens that affects the mood of the scene. In this case, it’s Ines’s forceful response to Leonora’s reverie, underscored by frantic, worried strings (beginning of Track 4). Ines changes the subject from the unknown troubadour to Leonora herself. But Leonora won’t listen—“Obblarlo!” (oh-bllee-ARE-lo: “Forget him?”). Impossible! Ines just doesn’t understand. With the lively cabaletta “Di tale amor” Leonora intends to explain.
Leonora's cabaletta, “Di tale amor,” Act I, Scene 2 “Di tale amor” (dee TAH-leh ah-MORE: “With such love,” Tracks 5, 6 and 7) is a traditionally upbeat, well-ornamented cabaletta. It intercuts briefly in the middle (Track 6) to protect, which sets the stage for Leonora to repeat the stanza (Track 7), trilling and leaping to ever higher notes.

It's common for cabalettas to be forward-looking, and Leonora ends this one with two future-tense verbs, “vivrò” (veev-RO) and “morirò” (mow-ree-RO): She will either live for the troubadour or die for him. Students should listen closely to these lines at the ends of both Track 5 and Track 7. The melody with which Leonora mentions dying is as proud and joyful as that with which she sings of love. Some critics hear this as Verdi commenting with irony on Leonora’s unqualified declaration. Ask students what they think. Then have them take notes at the bottom of the worksheet.

What have they learned about Leonora from this double aria?

What kind of person is she?

How might her memories of the troubadour—her back story—affect her future?

LISTENING GUIDE FOR THE REPRODUCIBLE “COUNT DI LUNA’S ARIA”

Introduction Leonora's Act I aria leaves no doubt about the “Leonora loves Manrico” aspect of Il Trovatore. The Count’s aria in Act II does the same for “Count di Luna loves Leonora.” In fact, it reveals that there’s little else on his mind. He believes Manrico has died in battle, so there’s no need to reflect on idea #4: “The Count hates and fears Manrico—and wants him dead.”

The sequence begins as the Count and Ferrando slip into the convent, hoping to snatch Leonora before she can take religious vows. The sneaky plucked strings that open the introductory section, Track 8, depict their stealth. Ferrando, perhaps as uncertain about the plan as lines was in the case of Leonora, tentatively characterizes his superior as “bold,” and the Count runs with it, whipping himself into a frenzy, almost proud of his obsession. The cavatina, Track 9, reveals that within that obsession lies gender emotion.

Count di Luna's cavatina, “Il balen del suo sorriso,” Act II, Scene 2 Woodwinds play softly as Il balen del suo sorriso (ee-bah-LEN del SUE-oh so-REE-zo: “The flash of her smile”) begins, consistent with the romance in the Count’s thoughts. He sings of love that inflames him, of a storm in his heart. These images of power, prefigured in the introductory section, swell here. But now he credits Leonora’s smile with calming the storm. By the end of the cavatina, Verdi’s music demonstrates that the Count can, indeed, find a calm within himself (Track 9).

Tempo di mezzo, Act II, Scene 2 Ultimately, however, the Count is a man of action, not romance. The middle section (Track 10) sets his plan into action. The ceremony is about to begin. The pace quickens. The Count gives orders. His soldiers obey.

Count di Luna's cabaletta, “Per me ora fatale,” Act II, Scene 2 Like Leonora’s, Count di Luna’s cabaletta (Track 11) looks to the future. Yet “Per me ora fatale” (par mah OH-rah fa-TA-leh: “Speed up time for me”) sounds more like a battle march than an ecstatic vision, and battles need enemies. The Count pits himself against God for Leonora’s hand. He almost seems to have forgotten the need for stealth in the convent—until his men join in whispering (Track 12). The Count takes their cue, toning his blasphemous challenge down to a similar whisper, but keeps repeating it with barely managed excitement until the double aria concludes where it began, with soldiers psyching themselves up: Be bold!

As with Leonora’s aria, students should take a moment here to record their thoughts about the Count.

What has this double aria revealed?

Does Count di Luna seem to be concerned with the past?

How might the sentiments expressed here affect his future behavior?

LISTENING GUIDE FOR THE REPRODUCIBLE “MANRICO’S ARIA”

Introduction Manrico, the troubadour, is the third leg of the central love triangle. As Leonora did in Act I, Scene 2, and the Count in Act II, Scene 2, he begins his solo by expressing one of the five big ideas: “Manrico loves Leonora.” Here, however, Verdi and Cammarano vary the double-aria pattern. The big change comes where it usually does: in the tempo di mezzo, the middle section.

The sequence also brings a small change. Both Leonora and the Count sang about absent loves. Here, Leonora is present and, as heard in the introductory section (Track 13), quite worried. Manrico tries to cheer her, virtually without orchestral accompaniment. This seems not to work. The orchestral section that follows conveys Leonora’s unconvinced silence. Manrico needs to do more.

Manrico’s cavatina, “Ah sì, ben mio,” Act III, Scene 2 In “Ah sì, ben mio” (ah see ben MEE-oh: “Ah yes, my love”), Track 14, Manrico does his best to raise Leonora’s spirits. He expresses both his confidence and his love. But once more, a troubling accompaniment underlies the brave song. Manrico knows he is singing against the odds. As the cavatina’s last lines recur several times, Manrico ends up singing more about love after death than love in real life. It’s hard to imagine how he could follow up with a bouncy cabaletta.
Leonora’s cabaletta, “Di tale amor,” Act I, Scene 2  “Di tale amor” (dee TAH-ah-leh ah-MORE: “With such love,” Tracks 5, 6 and 7) is a traditionally upbeat, well-ornamented cabaletta. Ines interrupts briefly in the middle (Track 6) to protest, which sets the stage for Leonora to repeat the stanza (Track 7), trilling and leaping to even higher notes.

It’s common for cabalettas to be forward-looking, and Leonora ends this one with two future-tense verbs, “vivrò” (veev-RO) and “morirò” (mow-ree-RO): She will either live for the troubadour or die for him. Students should listen closely to these lines at the ends of both Track 5 and Track 7. The melody with which Leonora mentions dying is as proud and joyful as that with which she sings of love. Some critics hear this as Verdi commenting with irony on Leonora’s unqualified declaration. Ask students what they think. Then have them take notes at the bottom of the worksheet.

What have they learned about Leonora from this double aria?

What kind of person is she?

How might her memories of the troubadour—her back story—affect her future?

LISTENING GUIDE FOR THE REPRODUCIBLE “COUNT DI LUNA’S ARIA”

Introduction Leonora’s Act I aria leaves no doubt about the “Leonora loves Manrico” aspect of Il Trovatore. The Count’s aria in Act II does the same for “Count di Luna loves Leonora.” In fact, it reveals that there’s little else on his mind. He believes Manrico has died in battle, so there’s no need to reflect on idea #4: “The Count hates and fears Manrico—and wants him dead.”

The sequence begins as the Count and Ferrando slip into the convent, hoping to catch the Count can, indeed, find a calm within himself (Track 9).

What is the Count’s plan?

What has become of his hopes for the future?

How might the sentiments expressed here affect his future behavior?

LISTENING GUIDE FOR THE REPRODUCIBLE “MANRICO’S ARIA”

Introduction Manrico, the troubadour, is the third leg of the central love triangle. As Leonora did in Act I, Scene 2, and the Count in Act II, Scene 2, he begins his solo by expressing one of the five big ideas: “Manrico loves Leonora.” Here, however, Verdi and Cammarano vary the double-aria pattern. The big change comes where it usually does: in the tempo di mezzo, the middle section.

The sequence also brings a small change. Both Leonora and the Count sang about absences. Here, Leonora is present and, as heard in the introductory section (Track 13), quite worried. Manrico tries to cheer her, virtually without orchestral accompaniment. This seems not to work. The orchestral section that follows conveys Leonora’s unconvincing silence. Manrico needs to do more.

Manrico’s cavatina, “Ah sì, ben mio,” Act III, Scene 2 In “Ah sì, ben mio” (ah see ben MEE-oh: “Ah yes, my love”), Track 14, Manrico does his best to raise Leonora’s spirits. He expresses both his confidence and his love. But once more, a troubling accompaniment underlies the brave song. Manrico knows he is singing against the odds. As the cavatina’s last lines recur several times, Manrico ends up singing more about love after death than love in real life. It’s hard to imagine how he could follow up with a bouncy cabaletta.
PART II: TWEAKING THE DOUBLE ARIA

Step 6: Begin the session with a review of basic ideas from Part I.

- the double-aria form
- introductory section
- cavatina
- tempo di mezzo
- cabaletta

The core plot of Il Trovatore: the love triangle of Manrico, Leonora, and the Count, plus Manrico’s love for his mother.

Step 7: Have students take out their “Good Guys and Bad Guys” reproducibles.

Ask whether anyone has heard the term “back story.” Either generate or present a definition of the term: Back story describes experiences and relationships in the lives of characters that took place before the present story began.

Solicit students’ responses to the question raised at the end of Part I: What do we know about these characters’ relationships that affects the simple plot descriptions from Step 17?
Part II: Tweaking the Double Aria

Step 6: Begin the session with a review of basic ideas from Part I.

- the double-aria form
- introductory section
- cavatina
- tempo di mezzo
- cabaletta
- the core plot of Il Trovatore: the love triangle of Manrico, Leonora, and the Count, plus Manrico’s love for his mother
- the dramatic change in the tempo di mezzo of Manrico’s Act III double aria

Step 7: Have students take out their “Good Guys and Bad Guys” reproducibles.

Ask whether anyone has heard the term “back story.” Either generate or present a definition of the term: Back story describes experiences and relationships in the lives of characters that took place before the present story began.

Solicit students’ responses to the question raised at the end of Part I: What do we know about these characters’ relationships that affects the simple plot descriptions from Step 17?
As mentioned above, students might note that Darth Vader is Luke and Leia's father, that Voldemort killed Harry Potter's parents, or that the Green Goblin was really the father of Peter Parker/Spider-Man's best friend, Harry Osborn.

All these are elements of back story. Invite students to comment on the ways these relationships affect Star Wars, Harry Potter, or Spider-Man. The back story doesn't necessarily change the plot, but it can change the implications of events.

• It can turn a happy event—the defeat of a bad guy—into tragedy—the death of a father or the father of a friend.
• It can heighten motivation: Harry Potter might have felt the need to fight Voldemort anyway, but his mission took on a different weight because Voldemort killed his parents.
• It can turn a friend into an enemy: Peter Parker’s friend Harry Osborn comes to hate Spider-Man when he believes the superhero has killed his father.

Back story hovers throughout Il Trovatore. In fact, one crucial bit of back story changes the implications of the opera’s ending.

To consolidate students’ thinking, have them fill in the “Back Story” and “Implications of Back Story” columns of the “Good Guys and Bad Guys” reproducible for each of the three contemporary stories, before returning to Il Trovatore.

Step 8: During the remainder of the lesson, students will study the following arias that reveal back story in Il Trovatore: Manrico’s Act III cabaletta and Azucena’s double aria from Act II, Scene 1.

In each case, distribute the appropriate reproducible found at the back of this guide and have students follow along as they listen to the track. Invite them to look for clues in the track, taking notes in the space provided on the reproducible.
As mentioned above, students might note that Darth Vader is Luke and Leia’s father, that Voldemort killed Harry Potter’s parents, or that the Green Goblin was really the father of Peter Parker/Spider-Man’s best friend, Harry Osborn.

All these are elements of back story. Invite students to comment on the ways these relationships affect Star Wars, Harry Potter, or Spider-Man. The back story doesn’t necessarily change the plot, but it can change the implications of events.

• It can turn a happy event—the defeat of a bad guy—into tragedy—the death of a father or the father of a friend.

• It can heighten motivation: Harry Potter might have felt the need to fight Voldemort anyway, but his mission took on a different weight because Voldemort killed his parents.

• It can turn a friend into an enemy: Peter Parker’s friend Harry Osborn comes to hate Spider-Man when he believes the superhero has killed his father.

Back story hovers throughout Il Trovatore. In fact, one crucial bit of back story changes the implications of the opera’s ending.

To consolidate students’ thinking, have them fill in the “Back Story” and “Implications of Back Story” columns of the “Good Guys and Bad Guys” reproducible for each of the three contemporary stories, before returning to Il Trovatore.

Step 8: During the remainder of the lesson, students will study the following arias that reveal back story in Il Trovatore: Manrico’s Act III cabaletta and Azucena’s double aria from Act II, Scene 1.

In each case, distribute the appropriate reproducible found at the back of this guide and have students follow along as they listen to the track. Invite them to look for clues in the track, taking notes in the space provided on the reproducible.
Azucena’s first aria, “Stride la vampa,” Act II, Scene 1 Azucena’s double aria begins without introduction. After luring the audience into jollity with the famous Anvil Chorus (see Musical Highlight: Hail, Hail the Gypsy Band), Verdi and Cammarano drop a bombshell: “Stride la vampai!” (STREE-deh la VAM-pa: “The blaze roars!”). Of course, a listener who doesn’t understand the words would be forgiven for thinking this is a folk dance.

Azucena’s first aria is technically not a cavatina, but a canzone (cahn-TSO-neh)—a solo that is a song from the point of view of the characters as well as the audience. It certainly doesn’t have the pensive lyricism of the usual cavatina. It’s as lifting as any cabaletta. As in “Di quella pira”, Verdi repeats a simple rhythmic pattern, here to almost hypnotic effect, and the mezzo-soprano’s vocal line is full of eerie grace.

When students read the lyrics, they may be startled by the contrast between the catchy melody and the grisly story this woman tells. Is she mad? Inured to the horror? Is this just another ghost story for her? Why does she tell it in the present tense? Students might enjoy developing their own theories about the juxtaposition of sound and sense in “Stride la vampa.”

In any event, the tempo di mezzo demonstrates that this canzone is even more mysterious to Azucena’s son than it is to the audience—since they heard the same tale from a different perspective early in Act I (see Musical Highlight: Ghost Story).

Tempo di mezzo, Act II, Scene 1 As direct as “Stride la vampa” may be, both the tempo di mezzo and the second half of the aria that follow are sinuous and complex. Now that we’ve met Azucena, the tempo di mezzo introduces her relationship with her son, Manrico.

In Track 20, Azucena and Manrico are together in public. Cammarano and Verdi tuck a critical exchange into a snippet of conversation with other gypsies. First, Azucena wails, “Mi vendica!” (me VEN-dee-ka: “Avenge me!”). Then Manrico mutters, in effect, “There’s that mysterious phrase yet again.”

The gypsy band marches off, so that Manrico can have a private conversation with his mother (Track 21). He begs her to fill in the gaps of her cryptic tale, and she does, concisely, right away. But that isn’t enough for Azucena. In the second half of her aria, she tells the tale a third time.

Azucena’s second aria, “Condotta ell’era in ceppi,” Act II, Scene 1 As her first aria is no cavatina, the second part of Azucena’s double aria, “Condotta ell’era in ceppi” (cone-DOE-ta el-AIR-ah een CHEP-pea: “She was led in chains”), is not generally referred to as a cabaletta but as a “narrative aria.”

It is neither merry nor lustful nor pointedly energetic. For the third time in a row, Azucena tells the story of her mother’s burning—in greater detail than “Stride la vampa” or the tempo di mezzo, and now distinctly a memory, in the past tense. She drops her moody persona. Vulnerability alternates with compassion. She even reveals the origin of her chilling “Mi vendica!”

Her telling (Tracks 22, 24, and 26) is twice interrupted by Manrico (Tracks 23 and 25). The first of these breaks (Tracks 22 and 23) divides her mother’s story from her own. The second (Tracks 25 and 26) separates the story proper from one of Azucena’s most personal, human, and mournful admissions: how it feels to remember that day. All together, the structure highlights two key points:

• It explains Azucena’s cry of “Mi vendica!” (Track 23).
• It comes to a climax by adding a crucial bit of information to the back story as audiences know it so far: when Azucena threw the baby into the fire, “Mio figlio avea bruciato!”—“I had burned my own son!” (Track 25).

Step 9: Before listening to Track 27 (the end of Azucena’s aria), pause to review Azucena’s story. Make sure students can distinguish the roles played by:
means of a double aria, one heard in Act II, Scene 1, Azucena’s first appearance on stage—long before it has its impact on “Di quella pira.”

Azucena’s first aria, “Stride la vampa,” Act II, Scene 1 Azucena’s double aria begins without introduction. After luring the audience into jovity with the famous Anvil Chorus (see Musical Highlight: Hail, Hail the Gypsy Band), Verdi and Cammarano drop a bombshell: “Stride la vampai!” (STREE-deh la VAM-pa: “The blaze roars!”)

Track 19: Of course, a listener who doesn’t understand the words would be forgiven for thinking this is a folk dance.

Azucena’s first aria is technically not a cavatina, but a canzone (cahn-TSO-neh)—a solo that is a song from the point of view of the characters as well as the audience. It certainly doesn’t have the pensive lyricism of the usual cavatina. It’s as lilting as any cabaletta. As in “Di quella pira”, Verdi repeats a simple rhythmic pattern, here to almost hypnotic effect, and the mezzo-soprano’s vocal line is full of eerie grace.

When students read the lyrics, they may be startled by the contrast between the catchy melody and the grisly story this woman tells. Is she mad? Inured to the horror? Is this just another ghost story for her? Why does she tell it in the present tense? Students might enjoy developing their own theories about the juxtaposition of sound and sense in “Stride la vampa.”

In any event, the tempo di mezzo demonstrates that this canzone is even more mysterious to Azucena’s son than it is to the audience—since they heard the same tale from a different perspective early in Act I (see Musical Highlight: Ghost Story).

Tempo di mezzo, Act II, Scene 1 As direct as “Stride la vampa” may be, both the tempo di mezzo and the second half of the aria that follow are sinuous and complex. Now that we’ve met Azucena, the tempo di mezzo introduces her relationship with her son, Manrico.

In Track 20, Azucena and Manrico are together in public. Cammarano and Verdi tuck a critical exchange into a snippet of conversation with other gypsies. First, Azucena wails, “Mi vendica!” (me VEN-dee-ka: “Avenge me!”). Then Manrico mutters, in effect, “There’s that mysterious phrase yet again.”

The gypsy band marches off, so that Manrico can have a private conversation with his mother (Track 21). He begs her to fill in the gaps of her cryptic tale, and she does, concisely, right away. But that isn’t enough for Azucena. In the second half of her aria, she tells the tale a third time.

Azucena’s second aria, “Condotta all’era in ceppi,” Act II, Scene 1 As her first aria is no cavatina, the second part of Azucena’s double aria, “Condotta all’era in ceppi” (cone-DOE-ta all-lAIR-ah een CHEP-pee: “She was led in chains”), is not generally referred to as a cabaletta but as a “narrative aria.”

It is neither merry nor lustful nor pointedly energetic. For the third time in a row, Azucena tells the story of her mother’s burning—in greater detail than “Stride la vampa” or the tempo di mezzo, and now distinctly a memory, in the past tense. She drops her moody persona. Vulnerability alternates with compassion. She even reveals the origin of her chilling “Mi vendica!”

Her telling (Tracks 22, 24, and 26) is twice interrupted by Manrico (Tracks 23 and 25). The first of these breaks (Tracks 22 and 23) divides her mother’s story from her own. The second (Tracks 25 and 26) separates the story proper from one of Azucena’s most personal, human, and mournful admissions: how it feels to remember that day. All together, the structure highlights two key points:

- It explains Azucena’s cry of “Mi vendica!” (Track 23)
- It comes to a climax by adding a crucial bit of information to the back story as audiences know it so far: when Azucena threw the baby into the fire, “Mio figlio avea bruciato!”—“I had burned my own son!” (Track 25)

Step 9: Before listening to Track 27 (the end of Azucena’s aria), pause to review Azucena’s story. Make sure students can distinguish the roles played by:
• Azucena’s mother (accused of bewitching the Count’s baby brother; burned at the stake)
• Azucena (kidnapped the Count’s baby brother; burned a child to death—presumably the Count’s baby brother; raised Manrico; herself threatened with burning according to Ruiz’s report in Act III, Scene 2)

Make sure, too, that they recognize the added bit of back story: Azucena’s declaration that it was her own son whom she burned by mistake.

Step 10: Track 27 contains one of the most important moments in Il Trovatore, and one of the strangest moments in any opera. It directly addresses the implications of the new information Azucena has presented. Have students follow along as they listen, then probe their understandings:

- Why does Manrico ask, “E chi son io?”
  (eh key sown EE-oh: “Who am I, then?”)

- What does Azucena mean when she replies, “Tu sei mio figlio”
  (too SEH-e-oh FEE-lyo: “You are my son”)?

- Does Manrico believe her?
  (Think of “Di quella pira,” which he sings later in the opera.)

- Should he believe her? Why?

Step 11: Returning to the “Good Guys and Bad Guys” reproducible, students can now fill in the section for Il Trovatore—the four main characters (Manrico, Leonora, Count di Luna, Azucena), the basic plot, the back story, and the implications of the back story. Questions to consider include:

- What would be the implication if Manrico were not Azucena’s biological son? (He would be someone else’s son. In fact, the Count’s younger brother.)

- How might the truth about the relationship of Azucena and Manrico affect the story? (It’s possible that Manrico and the Count are not only enemies, but brothers and in love with the same woman.)

- How might it affect Manrico’s actions?

- How might it affect the Count’s actions?

- How might it affect Leonora’s actions?

Recall that, in Step 3, it was mentioned that the Count orders Manrico beheaded at the end of the opera. If the Count should learn this new information (as in fact he does at the very, very end), how would it change the meaning of his having Manrico killed?

Step 12: Conclude the lesson by comparing Il Trovatore to the contemporary narratives.

- How is it similar?
- How is it different?
- Can students imagine operas based on Star Wars, Spider-Man, or Harry Potter?
- How might those operas be structured?

FOLLOW-UP This Classroom Activity is designed not only to familiarize students with the characters and events of Il Trovatore, but also to point them to the relationship between visible, active plot and back story in a narrative and to introduce them to the double aria as a means of enriching character and conveying back story.

As a follow-up, students can start sketching operas based on Star Wars, Harry Potter, and Spider-Man. They should pick a character, then write the text for a moderately paced cavatina and a briskly paced cabaletta. These can be hip-hop style, spoken-word pieces, or set to the melodies of familiar songs. The cavatina and cabaletta should address elements of back story as well as personality, just like those in Il Trovatore.

---

Fun Fact: Although she does little in Il Trovatore but tell her story again and again, the character of Azucena seemed so important to Verdi that, at one point, he considered calling the opera La Zingara, “The Gypsy Woman.”
Step 12: Conclude the lesson by comparing Il Trovatore to the contemporary narratives.
- How is it similar?
- How is it different?
- Can students imagine operas based on Star Wars, Spider-Man, or Harry Potter?
- How might these operas be structured?

FOllow-Up

This Classroom Activity is designed not only to familiarize students with the characters and events of Il Trovatore, but also to point them to the relationship between visible, active plot and backstory in a narrative and to introduce them to the double aria as a means of enriching character and conveying backstory.

As a follow-up, students can start sketching operas based on Star Wars, Harry Potter, and Spider-Man. They should pick a character, then write the text for a moderately paced cavatina and a briskly paced cabaletta. These can be hip-hop style, spoken-word pieces, or set to the melodies of familiar songs. The cavatina and cabaletta should address elements of backstory as well as personality, just like those in Il Trovatore.

---

FUN FACT: Although she does little in Il Trovatore but tell her story again and again, the character of Azucena seemed so important to Verdi that, at one point, he considered calling the opera La Zingara, “The Gypsy Woman.”

---

- Azucena’s mother (accused of bewitching the Count’s baby brother; burned at the stake)
- Azucena (kidnapped the Count’s baby brother; burned a child to death—presumably the Count’s baby brother; raised Manrico; herself threatened with burning according to Ruiz’s report in Act III, Scene 2)

Make sure, too, that they recognize the added bit of backstory: Azucena’s declaration that it was her own son whom she burned by mistake.

Step 10:

Track 27 contains one of the most important moments in Il Trovatore, and one of the strangest moments in any opera. It directly addresses the implications of the new information Azucena has presented. Have students follow along as they listen, then probe their understandings:

- Why does Manrico ask, “E chi son io?” (oh key sown EE-oh: “Who am I, then?”)
- What does Azucena mean when she replies, “Tu sei mio figlio” (too SEH-ee MEE-oh FEEL-yo: “You are my son”)?
- Does Manrico believe her? (Think of “Di quella pira,” which he sings later in the opera.)
- Should he believe her? Why?

Step 11:

Returning to the “Good Guys and Bad Guys” reproducible, students can now fill in the section for Il Trovatore—the four main characters (Manrico, Leonora, Count di Luna, Azucena), the basic plot, the backstory, and the implications of the backstory. Questions to consider include:

- What would be the implication if Manrico were not Azucena’s biological son? (He would be someone else’s son. In fact, the Count’s younger brother.)
- How might the truth about the relationship of Azucena and Manrico affect the story? (It’s possible that Manrico and the Count are not only enemies, but brothers and in love with the same woman.)
- How might it affect Manrico’s actions?
- How might it affect the Count’s actions?
- How might it affect Leonora’s actions?

Recall that, in Step 3, it was mentioned that the Count orders Manrico beheaded at the end of the opera. If the Count should learn this new information (as in fact he does at the very, very end), how would it change the meaning of his having Manrico killed?
Hail, Hail the Gypsy Band: A Close Look at the Anvil Chorus

The odds are good that your students will recognize this famous melody from Il Trovatore. The Anvil Chorus, sung by the gypsy band as they make, then head off to sell their wares, has over the years been borrowed by Gilbert and Sullivan for The Pirates of Penzance, turned into “Hail, Hail The Gang’s All Here,” and refreshed with new lyrics by countless sports teams, camp counselors, and advertisers.

The Chorus opens Act II—a rare bit of sunshine in a story full of woe. An all-male chorus, spry and ready for a new day, sings a melody that rises as surely and powerfully as the dawn it describes (Track 28). The time comes—“All’opra!” (“To work!”)—they call for their tools, and up swells the sort of rhythmically unforgettable jingle that has eased laborers’ toil since time began (Track 29). The lyric may be a bit bawdy, as workers’ songs can be, but it suits the happy-go-lucky spirit, and even the women sing along.

After an appropriately enthusiastic orchestral break, first the men, then the whole gypsy camp, join in a second verse. The subject shifts to that other perennial topic of song, drinking, before it’s time to get back to banging hammers on anvils and singing of zingarellas (gypsy girls)—(Track 30).

But the Anvil Chorus scene is more than a rousing crowd-pleaser. It also lures audiences into a sense of joyful calm, to be smashed by the horror of Azucena’s aria, “Stride la vampa” (see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8).

The orchestral introduction to the Anvil Chorus can be heard in Track 36 and is referenced on page 24.

Ghost Story: A Close Look at Ferrando’s Story

One tale in particular hovers over the plot of Il Trovatore, the story of a child’s disappearance. It’s told from one perspective seconds after the curtain goes up, then from another near the start of Act II (see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8, pages 16–19).

Ferrando, an officer in the army of Count di Luna, tells the story first in Act I, Scene 1. Even though it revolves around the brother of his superior, Ferrando’s “Abbieta zingara” (ah-BYET-ah DZING-ah-rah: “A miserable gypsy woman”), is presented as a kind of ghost story, entertainment for his troops as they pass a night watch (Tracks 31 and 32).

The piece starts straightforwardly enough, in a kind of “once upon a time” spirit, right up until Ferrando asks the rhetorical question “e chi trova d’accanto a quel bambino?” (eh key TROE-vah dah-CON-toe ah kwell bum-BEE-no: “and whom did she find next to that baby?”). His men, in rapt attention, call back “Chi? Chi mai?” (key MAH-ee: “Who? Who was it?”).

Ferrando takes their interest as an opportunity to launch into a prancing, repetitive melody, at once cheery and banal, though his words tell of a notorious witch and the jeering mob that chased her. It’s as if he wants to thrill the men while showing how little the story affects him (Track 32).

Verdi uses the musical phrase heard at the beginning of Track 32 to represent the idea of fire or a burning flame, which becomes a binding element of the plot. This flame becomes a musical element in the drama and is the only theme that recurs several times in the opera. As Ferrando launches into the tale of the gypsy, note the 16th-note phrase, which occurs no less than 22 times in the first stanza.

The soldiers’ impassioned response shows that Ferrando succeeded in engaging them (end of Track 32).

Ferrando continues in the same tone, until he comes to the point where the child gets sick (Track 33). He picks up the pace, reeling his listeners in until, in Track 34, he rams the punch line home—the boy had been bewitched!

Point made, Ferrando returns to the prancing, 16th-note phrase in Track 35—never mind that he’s telling of a woman and a child being burned alive.

He finishes by insistently repeating “bruciato a mezzo” (bru-CHA-toe a MEH-Dzoh: “half burned”) a macabre image that riles the soldiers up even more.

MUSICAL HIGHLIGHT

MUSICAL HIGHLIGHT

MUSICAL HIGHLIGHT ARE BRIEF OPPORTUNITIES TO:

• help students make sense of opera
• what their interest in upcoming transmissions of The Met: Live in HD

Each focuses on audio selections from Il Trovatore available online at metopera.org/education or on the accompanying CD. Reproducibles providing texts and translations for all the selections can be found at the back of this guide.

These “mini-lessons” will in practice take up no more than a few minutes of class time. They’re designed to help you bring opera into your classroom while minimizing interruption of your ongoing curriculum. Feel free to use as many as you like.

RUN FACTS

In 1869, a brand new coliseum in Boston was inaugurated with a concert to benefit orphans and widows of the Civil War, attended by 30,000 people. At this National Peace Jubilee, a hundred firemen accompanied the Anvil Chorus from Il Trovatore playing real anvils with real sledge hammers.

The design of the Met production of Il Trovatore is inspired by The Disasters of War, Francisco Goya’s engravings of the Spanish war of independence from Napoleonic France. These images were so politically charged that no one dared publish them until 1863, when Goya had been dead for 35 years.

The design of the Met production of Il Trovatore is inspired by The Disasters of War, Francisco Goya’s engravings of the Spanish war of independence from Napoleonic France.

RUN FACTS

The design of the Met production of Il Trovatore is inspired by The Disasters of War, Francisco Goya’s engravings of the Spanish war of independence from Napoleonic France. These images were so politically charged that no one dared publish them until 1863, when Goya had been dead for 35 years.

FR FACT: The design of the Met production of Il Trovatore is inspired by The Disasters of War, Francisco Goya’s engravings of the Spanish war of independence from Napoleonic France.
Hail, Hail the Gypsy Band: A Close Look at the Anvil Chorus

The odds are good that your students will recognize this famous melody from Il Trovatore. The Anvil Chorus, sung by the gypsy band as they make, then head off to sell their wares, has over the years been borrowed by Gilbert and Sullivan for The Pirates of Penzance, turned into “Hail, Hail The Gang’s All Here,” and refreshed with new lyrics by countless sports teams, camp counselors, and advertisers.

The Chorus opens Act II—a rare bit of sunshine in a story full of woe. An all-male chorus, spry and ready for a new day, sings a melody that rises as surely and powerfully as the dawn it describes (Track 28). When the time comes—“All’opra!” (“To work!”)—they call for their tools, and up swims the sort of rhythmically unforgettable jingle that has eased laborers’ toil since time began (Track 29). The lyric may be a bit bawdy, as workers’ songs can be, but it suits the happy-go-lucky spirit, and even the women sing along.

After an appropriately enthusiastic orchestral break, first the men, then the whole gypsy camp, join in a second verse. The subject shifts to that other perennial topic of song, drinking, before it’s time to get back to banging hammers on anvils and singing of zingarellas (gypsy girls)—Track 30.

But the Anvil Chorus scene is more than a rousing crowd-pleaser. It also lures audiences into a sense of joyful calm, to be smashed by the horror of Azucena’s aria, “Stride la vampa” (see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8). The piece starts straightforwardly enough, in a kind of “once upon a time” spirit, but the Anvil Chorus provides a necessary interruption of your ongoing curriculum. Feel free to use as many times as you like.

The odds are good that your students will recognize this famous melody from Il Trovatore. The Anvil Chorus, sung by the gypsy band as they make, then head off to sell their wares, has over the years been borrowed by Gilbert and Sullivan for The Pirates of Penzance, turned into “Hail, Hail The Gang’s All Here,” and refreshed with new lyrics by countless sports teams, camp counselors, and advertisers.

The Chorus opens Act II—a rare bit of sunshine in a story full of woe. An all-male chorus, spry and ready for a new day, sings a melody that rises as surely and powerfully as the dawn it describes (Track 28). When the time comes—“All’opra!” (“To work!”)—they call for their tools, and up swims the sort of rhythmically unforgettable jingle that has eased laborers’ toil since time began (Track 29). The lyric may be a bit bawdy, as workers’ songs can be, but it suits the happy-go-lucky spirit, and even the women sing along.

After an appropriately enthusiastic orchestral break, first the men, then the whole gypsy camp, join in a second verse. The subject shifts to that other perennial topic of song, drinking, before it’s time to get back to banging hammers on anvils and singing of zingarellas (gypsy girls)—Track 30.

But the Anvil Chorus scene is more than a rousing crowd-pleaser. It also lures audiences into a sense of joyful calm, to be smashed by the horror of Azucena’s aria, “Stride la vampa” (see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8).

The orchestral introduction to the Anvil Chorus can be heard in Track 36 and is referenced on page 24.

Fun Facts

In 1869, a brand new coliseum in Boston was inaugurated with a concert to benefit orphans and widows of the Civil War, attended by 30,000 people. At this National Peace Jubilee, a hundred firemen accompanied the Anvil Chorus from Il Trovatore playing real anvils with real sledge hammers.

One tale in particular hovers over the plot of Il Trovatore, the story of a child’s disappearance. It’s told from one perspective seconds after the curtain goes up, then from another near the start of Act II (see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8, pages 16–19).

Ferrando, an officer in the army of Count di Luna, tells the story first in Act I, Scene 1. Even though it revolves around the brother of his superior, Ferrando’s “Abbieta zingara” (ah-BYET-ah DZING-ah-rah: “A miserable gypsy woman”), is presented as a kind of ghost story, entertainment for his troops as they pass a night watch (Tracks 31 and 32).

The piece starts straightforwardly enough, in a kind of “once upon a time” spirit, right up until Ferrando asks the rhetorical question “e chi trova d’accanto a quel bambino?” (eh key TROE-vah dah-CON-toe ah kwel bum-BEE-no: “and whom did she find next to that baby?”). His men, in rapt attention, call back “Chi? Chi mai?” (key MAH-moi: “Who? Who was it?”).

Ferrando takes their interest as an opportunity to launch into a prancing, repetitive melody, at once cheery and banal, though his words tell of a notorious witch and the jeering mob that chased her. It’s as if he wants to thrill the men while showing how little the story affects him (Track 32).

Verdi uses the musical phrase heard at the beginning of Track 32 to represent the idea of fire or a burning flame, which becomes a binding element of the plot. This flame becomes a musical element in the drama and is the only theme that recurs several times in the opera. As Ferrando launches into the tale of the gypsy, note the 16th-note phrase, which occurs no less than 22 times in the first stanza.

The soldiers’ impassioned response suggests that Ferrando succeeded in engaging them (end of Track 32).

Ferrando continues in the same tone, until he comes to the point where the child gets sick (Track 33). He picks up the pace, reeling his listeners in until, in Track 34, he rams the punch line home—the boy had been bewitched!

Point made, Ferrando returns to the prancing, 16th-note phrase in Track 35—never mind that he’s telling of a woman and a child being burned alive.

He finishes by insistently repeating “bruciato a mezzo” (bru-CHA-toe a MEH-dzo: “half burned”) a macabre image that riles the soldiers up even more.
Ferrando’s ghost story provides an interesting opportunity for students to practice critical thinking. The above discussion provides clues to his use of rhetoric to manipulate his audience.

- What vocabulary does Ferrando use to encourage a particular point of view on the story?
- What other words might he have used to tell the story in a more neutral tone?
- How does Ferrando’s version of that terrible night differ from the one told by Azucena in Act II, Scene 1 (see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8, pages 18 and 19)?
- Which version do students believe is more accurate? What do they think actually happened?

FURTHER LISTENING:

If time permits, listen to the following three tracks with your students. Can they hear the “fire” phrase in each track?

1. The orchestral introduction to the Anvil Chorus in Act II: includes a phrase similar to the one Ferrando used in his Act I ghost story. There is a fire present as the gypsies gather round. Note the opening turn and the 16th-note run at the end of the second complete measure (Track 36).

2. The first part of Azucena’s double aria, the canzone: Azucena stares fixedly into the flames, imagining the fire that killed her mother many years ago. Note once again the phrase that occurs at the beginning of the canzone (Track 19—see Classroom Activity Part II, Step 8, page 18). It is in the same key (E minor) and same meter (3/4) as Ferrando’s narrative in Act I.

3. Manrico’s cabaletta in Act III, Scene 2: Manrico is about to marry Leonora when he receives word that Azucena (whom he still believes to be his mother) has been caught by the Count’s men and is about to be burned at the stake. He can see the flames of the funeral pyre burning in the distance. He vows vengeance in his fiery solo, “Di quella pira.” Note once again the four 16th notes at the beginning of nearly every other measure (Track 17—see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8, page 17).
Manrico’s cabaletta in Act III, Scene 2: Manrico is about to marry Leonora when he receives word that Azucena (whom he still believes to be his mother) has been caught by the Count’s men and is about to be burned at the stake. He can see the flames of the funeral pyre burning in the distance. He vows vengeance in his fiery solo, “Di quella pira.” Note once again the four 16th notes at the beginning of nearly every other measure (Track 17—see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8, page 17).

Ferrando’s ghost story provides an interesting opportunity for students to practice critical thinking. The above discussion provides clues to his use of rhetoric to manipulate his audience.

• What vocabulary does Ferrando use to encourage a particular point of view on the story?
• What other words might he have used to tell the story in a more neutral tone?
• How does Ferrando’s version of that terrible night differ from the one told by Azucena in Act II, Scene 1 (see Classroom Activity, Part II, Step 8, pages 18 and 19)?
• Which version do students believe is more accurate? What do they think actually happened?

FURTHER LISTENING:
If time permits, listen to the following three tracks with your students. Can they hear the “fire” phrase in each track?

1. The orchestral introduction to the Anvil Chorus in Act II: includes a phrase similar to the one Ferrando used in his Act I ghost story. There is a fire present as the gypsies gather round. Note the opening turn and the 16th-note run at the end of the second complete measure (Track 36).

2. The first part of Azucena’s double aria, the canzone: Azucena stares fixedly into the flames, imagining the fire that killed her mother many years ago. Note once again the phrase that occurs at the beginning of the canzone (Track 19—see Classroom Activity Part II, Step 8, page 18). It is in the same key (E minor) and same meter (3/4) as Ferrando’s narrative in Act I.

3.

Di quel-la pi-ra l’or-res-do fo-o
Supporting Students During
The Met: Live in HD Transmission

Thanks to print and audio recording, much about opera can be enjoyed long before a performance. But performance itself brings vital layers of sound and color, pageantry and technology, drama, skill, and craft. Performance activities are designed to help students tease apart different aspects of the experience, consider creative choices that have been made, and sharpen their own critical faculties.

Each activity incorporates a reproducible activity sheet. Students bring the activity sheets to the transmission to fill out during intermission and/or after the final curtain. The activities direct attention to characteristics of the production that might otherwise go unnoticed. Ratings matrices invite students to express their critique: use these ratings to spark discussions that call upon careful, critical thinking.

The basic activity sheet is called My Highs & Lows. Meant to be collected, opera by opera, over the course of the season, this sheet points students toward a consistent set of objects of observation. Its purposes are not only to help students articulate and express their opinions, but to support comparison and contrast, enriching understanding of the art form as a whole.

For Il Trovatore, the other activity sheet, The Disasters of War directs students' attention to the extraordinary stagecraft of this Live in HD production.

The Performance Activity reproducibles can be found in the back of this guide. Either activity can provide the basis for class discussion after the transmission. On the next page, you'll find an activity created specifically for follow-up after the Live in HD transmission.

---

Merciful Hit:
A Close Look at the Miserere

In the late 1800s, when the pianos in the parlors of middle-class homes were centers of entertainment, the Miserere (mee-zeh-REH-reh) section of Il Trovatore was a giant hit. Franz Liszt composed a piano transcription within a year of the opera’s premiere. The melody may be less familiar today, but its surprising mix of musical styles is as emotionally wrenching as ever.

The set of pieces known collectively in this opera as the Miserere is actually a tempo di mezzo, the middle section of a double aria sung by Leonora in Act IV, Scene 1 (see the Classroom Activity for more on the double aria structure). It follows the self-soothing cavatina “D’amor sull’ali rosee” (dah-MOR soo-LAH-lee RO-zeh) and precedes the hot-blooded cabaletta “Tu vedrai che amore” (too veh-DRAH-ee keh ah-MOR-eh). The section depicts the experience that moves Leonora from sorrow over Manrico’s fate to the steady resolution that she will save him or die trying.

The Miserere takes its name from its first section, a prayer for mercy for those who are about to die, sung in the style of Gregorian chant by a chorus of monks (Track 37). Leonora, overhearing them, knows they are praying for the soul of her beloved. She comments on the prayer with her own heartfelt, more typically operatic expression of grief (Track 38).

Barely has she finished, though, than she hears, from afar, a voice and the strumming of a lute. It’s Manrico singing his troubadour’s farewell to Leonora from his prison cell in the palace tower (Track 39). The austerity of this humble folk-style song could not contrast more vividly with Il Trovatore’s generally opulent orchestration. This is the tune that captured the 19th-century imagination, an eight-note melody so guileless, so lucid, that Leonora all but faints in response (Track 40). She weeps as the monks continue their prayer of mercy, until at last, her deepest fear wells up, alternating line for line at first, then word for word, with the sacred choir (Track 41).

Again Manrico’s unadorned folk tune cuts through. He pleads with Leonora, wherever she might be, never to forget him (Track 42). Leonora weeps and finally exclaims, “You? Forget you?” in an uncontrollable surge of fury, grief, and a kind of intimate irony. The monks pray. Manrico, unable to hear Leonora, continues to sing. These three parts—frenzy, prayer, and bare acceptance, each sung as if alone in the world—coalesce in Track 43, bringing the Miserere to its astonishing finish.

The Miserere also had a life outside the world of classical music. The legendary jazz pianist and innovator Jelly Roll Morton recalled learning the melody as a boy, and he played both traditional and “swing” versions as late as the 1930s. It was in the standard repertoire for pianists and organists who accompanied silent movies.
Supporting Students During
The Met: Live in HD Transmission

Thanks to print and audio recording, much about opera can be enjoyed long before a performance. But performance itself brings vital layers of sound and color, pageantry and technology, drama, skill, and craft. Performance activities are designed to help students tease apart different aspects of the experience, consider creative choices that have been made, and sharpen their own critical faculties.

Each activity incorporates a reproducible activity sheet. Students bring the activity sheets to the transmission to fill out during intermission and/or after the final curtain. The activities direct attention to characteristics of the production that might otherwise go unnoticed. Ratings matrices invite students to express their critique: use these ratings to spark discussions that call upon careful, critical thinking.

The basic activity sheet is called My Highs & Lows. Meant to be collected, opera by opera, over the course of the season, this sheet points students toward a consistent set of objects of observation. Its purposes are not only to help students articulate and express their opinions, but to support comparison and contrast, enriching understanding of the art form as a whole.

For Il Trovatore, the other activity sheet, The Disasters of War, directs students’ attention to the extraordinary stagecraft of this Live in HD production.

The Performance Activity reproducibles can be found in the back of this guide. Either activity can provide the basis for class discussion after the transmission. On the next page, you’ll find an activity created specifically for follow-up after the Live in HD transmission.

Merciful Hit: A Close Look at the Miserere

In the late 1800s, when the pianos in the parlors of middle-class homes were centers of entertainment, the Miserere (mee-zeh-REH-eh) section of Il Trovatore was a giant hit. Franz Liszt composed a piano transcription within a year of the opera’s premiere. The melody may be less familiar today, but its surprising mix of musical styles is as emotionally wrenching as ever.

The set of pieces known collectively in this opera as the Miserere is actually a tempo di mezzo, the middle section of a double aria sung by Leonora in Act IV, Scene 1 (see the Classroom Activity for more on the double aria structure). It follows the self-soothing cavatina “D’amor sull’ali rosee” (dah-MOR soo-LAH-lee RO-zeh) and precedes the hot-blooded cabaletta “Tu vedrai che amore” (too veh-DRAH-ee keh ah-MOR-eh). The section depicts the experience that moves Leonora from sorrow over Manrico’s fate to the steady resolution that she will save him or die trying.

The Miserere takes its name from its first section, a prayer for mercy for those who are about to die, sung in the style of Gregorian chant by a chorus of monks (Track 37). Leonora, overhearing them, knows they are praying for the soul of her beloved. She comments on the prayer with her own heartfelt, more typically operatic expression of grief (Track 38).

 Barely has she finished, though, than she hears, from afar, a voice and the strumming of a lute. It’s Manrico singing his troubadour’s farewell to Leonora from his prison cell in the palace tower (Track 39). The austerity of this humble folk-style song could not contrast more vividly with Il Trovatore’s generally opulent orchestration. This is the tune that captured the 19th-century imagination, an eight-note melody so guileless, so lucid, that Leonora all but faints in response (Track 40). She weeps as the monks continue their prayer of mercy, until at last, her deepest fear wells up, alternating line for line at first, then word for word, with the sacred choir (Track 41).

Again Manrico’s unadorned folk tune cuts through. He pleads with Leonora, wherever she might be, never to forget him (Track 42). Leonora weeps and finally exclaims, “You? Forget you?” in an uncontrollable surge of fury, grief, and a kind of intimate irony. The monks pray. Manrico, unable to hear Leonora, continues to sing. These three parts—frenzy, prayer, and bare acceptance, each sung as if alone in the world—coalesce in Track 43, bringing the Miserere to its astonishing finish.

The Miserere also had a life outside the world of classical music. The legendary jazz pianist and innovator Jelly Roll Morton recalled learning the melody as a boy, and he played both traditional and “swing” versions as late as the 1930s. It was in the standard repertoire for pianists and organists who accompanied silent movies.
In on the Joke:
A Discussion of Cultural Criticism

Students will enjoy starting the class with an open discussion of the Met performance. What did they like? What didn’t they? Did anything surprise them? What would they like to see or hear again? What would they have done differently? This discussion will offer students an opportunity to review the notes on their My Highs & Lows sheets, as well as their thoughts about the Goya-inspired imagery in this Met production—in short, to see themselves as Il Trovatore experts.

As discussed in the Classroom Activity, Il Trovatore combines a relatively simple core plot with a rich back story. The result has prompted many to describe the story as confusing or improbable.

Examples can be found on the reproducible, "In on the Joke." Make sure students can identify David McVicar, director of this production of Il Trovatore, who provides the last quotation on the sheet.

Now that students have seen Il Trovatore, they are, so to speak, in on the joke. They can apply their own expertise to the question: Does this opera make sense? Is it moving? Ridiculous? Neither? Perhaps both? In this discussion, be sure to prompt students to address specific aspects of Verdi’s opera and the Live in HD production, including:

- characters
- character relationships
- relationship of on-stage action to off-stage action and back story
- alignment of the score with the emotional tone of the libretto
- the orchestra’s contribution
- the performances
- the staging, including the performers’ physical locations on stage and with respect to one another
- the camera work in the HD transmission

The sidebar "Il Trovatore Parodies" on page 9 mentions some famous parodies of Il Trovatore. Students might enjoy participating in this tradition by creating their own Il Trovatore graphic novels or comic books.

Successful parody involves exaggeration, allusion, and the setting of plot and characters in a new context sufficiently similar for a viewer or reader to recognize. By providing practice in the identification and development of narrative structure, this follow-up activity offers another route to examining the problematic storyline of Il Trovatore.

Here you’ll find reproducibles of the resource and activity sheets for each Il Trovatore activity. Feel free to print these out and distribute them in your classroom.

My Highs & Lows and The Disasters of War are activity sheets to be used during The Met: Live in HD transmission. The latter is designed to focus student attention during the transmission and to support your post-transmission classroom work. My Highs & Lows is a collectible prompting closer attention to specific aspects of the opera. You may want to provide copies of My Highs & Lows not only to students, but to friends, family and other members of the community attending the transmission.
In on the Joke:
A Discussion of Cultural Criticism

Students will enjoy starting the class with an open discussion of the Met performance. What did they like? What didn’t they? Did anything surprise them? What would they like to see or hear again? What would they have done differently? This discussion will offer students an opportunity to review the notes on their My Highs & Lows sheets, as well as their thoughts about the Goya-inspired imagery in this Met production—in short, to see themselves as Il Trovatore experts.

As discussed in the Classroom Activity, Il Trovatore combines a relatively simple core plot with a rich back story. The result has prompted many to describe the story as confusing or improbable.

Examples can be found on the reproducible, “In on the Joke.” Make sure students can identify David McVicar, director of this production of Il Trovatore, who provides the last quotation on the sheet.

Now that students have seen Il Trovatore, they are, so to speak, in on the joke. They can apply their own expertise to the question: Does this opera make sense? Is it moving? Ridiculous? Neither? Perhaps both? In this discussion, be sure to prompt students to address specific aspects of Verdi’s opera and the Live in HD production, including:

• characters
• character relationships
• relationship of on-stage action to off-stage action and back story
• alignment of the score with the emotional tone of the libretto
• the orchestra’s contribution
• the performances
• the staging, including the performers’ physical locations on stage and with respect to one another
• the camera work in the HD transmission

The sidebar “Il Trovatore Parodies” on page 9 mentions some famous parodies of Il Trovatore. Students might enjoy participating in this tradition by creating their own Il Trovatore graphic novels or comic books.

Successful parody involves exaggeration, allusion, and the setting of plot and characters in a new context sufficiently similar for a viewer or reader to recognize. By providing practice in the identification and development of narrative structure, this follow-up activity offers another route to examining the problematic storyline of Il Trovatore.

Here you’ll find reproducibles of the resource and activity sheets for each Il Trovatore activity. Feel free to print these out and distribute them in your classroom.

My Highs & Lows and The Disasters of War are activity sheets to be used during The Met: Live in HD transmission. The latter is designed to focus student attention during the transmission and to support your post-transmission classroom work. My Highs & Lows is a collectible prompting closer attention to specific aspects of the opera. You may want to provide copies of My Highs & Lows not only to students, but to friends, family and other members of the community attending the transmission.
THE MET: LIVE IN HD
IL TROVATORE

CLASSROOM ACTIVITY SHEET
Backlit:
Good Guys and Bad Guys

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>GOOD GUY(S)</th>
<th>BAD GUY(S)</th>
<th>WHAT HAPPENS?</th>
<th>BACK STORY</th>
<th>IMPLICATIONS OF BACK STORY</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Star Wars</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harry Potter</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spider-Man</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Il Trovatore</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CLASSESSROOM ACTIVITY SHEET

Backlit:
Good Guys and Bad Guys

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>GOOD GUY(S)</th>
<th>BAD GUY(S)</th>
<th>WHAT HAPPENS?</th>
<th>BACK STORY</th>
<th>IMPLICATIONS OF BACK STORY</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Star Wars</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harry Potter</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spider-Man</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Il Trovatore</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>