GIUSEPPE VERDI

AIDA

CONDUCTOR

Daniele Rustioni

PRODUCTION
Sonja Frisell

set designer Gianni Quaranta

COSTUME DESIGNER
Dada Saligeri

LIGHTING DESIGNER
Gil Wechsler

choreographer Alexei Ratmansky

REVIVAL STAGE DIRECTOR Stephen Pickover

GENERAL MANAGER
Peter Gelb

MUSIC DIRECTOR EMERITUS
James Levine

PRINCIPAL CONDUCTOR Fabio Luisi

Opera in four acts

Libretto by Antonio Ghislanzoni

Friday, March 31, 2017 7:30–11:15PM

The production of Aida was made possible by a generous gift from

Mrs. Donald D. Harrington

The revival of this production is made possible by a gift from the Estate of Francine Berry

The Metropolitan Opera 2016-17 SEASON

The 1,158th Metropolitan Opera performance of GIUSEPPE VERDI'S

AIDA

CONDUCTOR

Daniele Rustioni

IN ORDER OF VOCAL APPEARANCE

RAMFIS

James Morris

radamès Jorge de León A PRIESTESS

Iennifer I

Jennifer Johnson Cano*

AMONASRO

George Gagnidze

AMNERIS

AIDA

Violeta Urmana

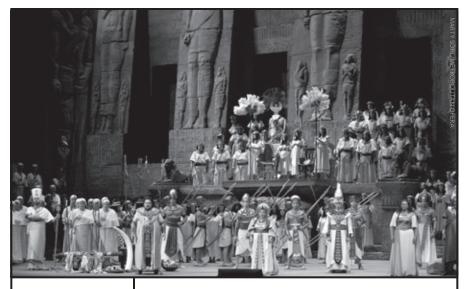

SOLO DANCERS
Jennifer Cadden
Scott Weber

Krassimira Stoyanova

THE KING

Morris Robinson*

A MESSENGER Ronald Naldi

A scene from Verdi's Aida Chorus Master Donald Palumbo Musical Preparation Donna Racik, Steven Eldredge,

Pierre Vallet, and Joshua Greene

Assistant Stage Directors Jonathon Loy and J. Knighten Smit Stage Band Conductor Gregory Buchalter

Italian Coach Loretta Di Franco

Prompter Donna Racik

Met Titles Christopher Bergen

Scenery, properties, and electrical props constructed and painted in Metropolitan Opera Shops

Costumes executed by Metropolitan Opera Costume
Department

Wigs and Makeup executed by Metropolitan Opera
Wig and Makeup Department

Headdresses by Rodney Gordon Studios and Miles-Laity, Ltd. Animals supervised by All-Tame Animals, Inc.

This performance is made possible in part by public funds from the New York State Council on the Arts.

Before the performance begins, please switch off cell phones and other electronic devices.

* Graduate of the Lindemann Young Artist Development Program

Yamaha is the Official Piano of the Metropolitan Opera.

Visit metopera.org

Met Titles

To activate, press the red button to the right of the screen in front of your seat and follow the instructions provided. To turn off the display, press the red button once again. If you have questions, please ask an usher at intermission.

STRAUSS

DER ROSENKAVALIER

APR 13, 17, 21, 24, 28 MAY 1, 5, 9, 13 mat

The great Renée Fleming delivers her final performances of one of her signature roles, the Marschallin, opposite the extraordinary Elīna Garanča as Octavian. Günther Groissböck plays the outlandish Baron Ochs alongside Erin Morley as Sophie. Sebastian Weigle conducts.

Tickets from $32 | metopera.org

Synopsis

Act I

Egypt, during the reign of the pharaohs. At the royal palace in Memphis, the high priest Ramfis tells the warrior Radamès that Ethiopia is preparing another attack against Egypt. Radamès hopes to command the Egyptian army. He is in love with Aida, the Ethiopian slave of Princess Amneris, the King's daughter, and he believes that victory in the war would enable him to free her and marry her. But Amneris also loves Radamès and is jealous of Aida. A messenger brings news that the Ethiopians are advancing. The King names Radamès to lead the army, and all join in a patriotic anthem. Left alone, Aida is torn between her love for Radamès and loyalty to her native country, where her father, Amonasro, is king.

In the temple of Vulcan, the priests consecrate Radamès to the service of the god. Ramfis orders him to protect the homeland.

Intermission (at approximately 8:15 pm)

Act II

Ethiopia has been defeated, and Amneris waits for the triumphant return of Radamès. Alone with Aida, she pretends that Radamès has fallen in battle, then says he is still alive. Aida's reactions leave no doubt that she loves Radamès. Amneris is certain she will defeat her rival.

At the city gates, the King and Amneris observe the victory celebrations and crown Radamès with a victor's wreath. Captured Ethiopians are led in, among them Amonasro, Aida's father, who signals his daughter not to reveal his identity as king. Radamès is impressed by Amonasro's eloquent plea for mercy and asks that the order for the prisoners to be executed be overruled, and for them to be freed instead. The King grants his request but keeps Amonasro in custody. He declares that as a victor's reward, Radamès will have Amneris's hand in marriage.

Intermission (AT APPROXIMATELY 9:30 PM)

Act III

On the eve of Amneris's wedding, Ramfis and Amneris pray in a temple on the banks of the Nile. Nearby, Aida is waiting for Radamès, lost in thoughts of her homeland. Suddenly, Amonasro appears. Appealing to Aida's sense of duty, he makes her promise to find out from Radamès which route the Egyptian army will take to invade Ethiopia. Amonasro hides as Radamès arrives. He and Aida dream about their future life together, and Radamès agrees to run away with her. Aida asks him about his army's route, and just as he reveals the secret, Amonasro emerges from his hiding place. Realizing what he has done, Radamès is horrified. Aida and Amonasro are trying to calm him when Ramfis and Amneris step out of the temple. Father and daughter are able to escape, but Radamès surrenders to the priests.

Synopsis continued

Pause

Act IV

Radamès awaits trial as a traitor, believing Aida to be dead. Even after he learns that she has survived, he rejects Amneris's offer to save him if he gives up Aida. Brought before the priests, Radamès refuses to answer their accusations and is condemned to be buried alive. Amneris begs for mercy, but the judges will not change their verdict.

Aida has hidden in the vault to share Radamès's fate. They express their love for the last time while Amneris, in the temple above, prays for Radamès.

In Focus

Giuseppe Verdi

Aida

Premiere: Cairo Opera House, 1871

This grandest of grand operas features an epic backdrop for what is in essence an intimate love story. Set in ancient Egypt and packed with magnificent choruses, complex ensembles, and elaborate ballets, Aida never loses sight of its three protagonists: Amneris, the proud daughter of the pharaoh; her slave, Aida, who is the princess of the rival kingdom of Ethiopia; and Radamès, the Egyptian warrior they both love. Few operas have matched Aida in its exploration of the conflict of private emotion and public duty, and perhaps no other has remained to the present day so unanimously appreciated by audiences and critics alike.

The Creators

In a remarkable career spanning six decades in the theater, Giuseppe Verdi (1813–1901) composed 28 operas, at least half of which are at the core of today's repertoire. His role in Italy's cultural and political development has made him an icon in his native country. The story of Aida is thought to be the creation of Auguste Mariette (1821–1881), an extraordinary French archaeologist who was the founder of the Egyptian Museum of Cairo (though opinions differ—Verdi biographer Mary Jane Phillips-Matz has argued that the source was actually Temistocle Solera). Camille du Locle (1832–1903), who collaborated on the scenario with Mariette and suggested the story to Verdi, had worked with the composer on the libretto of Don Carlos. An opera impresario in Paris, he commissioned Carmen from Georges Bizet for the Opéra Comique in 1875. Aida's librettist, Antonio Ghislanzoni (1824–1893), was a novelist and poet as well as the creator of some 85 librettos, most of which are forgotten today. He had previously worked with Verdi on the revision of La Forza del Destino (1869).

The Setting

The libretto indicates merely that the opera takes place in "ancient Egypt, in the time of the pharaohs." This may sound vague, but it was a clear direction to approach the drama as myth rather than anthropology or history. Europe's fascination with the ancient Nile civilization had been piqued with stories from Napoleon's Egyptian expedition at the end of the 18th century, and continued into the mid-19th century with the numerous archaeological discoveries being taken from the sands of Egypt and shipped to museums in the European capitals.

In Focus CONTINUED

The Music

The score of Aida is a sophisticated example of Italian Romanticism, imbued with a convincingly mysterious and exotic hue. Making no claims to authenticity (nobody knows what music in ancient Egypt sounded like), Verdi created a unique musical palette for this opera. The grandeur of the subject is aptly conveyed with huge patriotic choruses (Acts I and II) and the unforgettable Triumphal March in Act II. These public moments often serve as frames for the solos of the leading tenor and soprano: his grueling "Celeste Aida" right at the beginning of Act I, her demanding "Ritorna vincitor!" that follows, and her great internal journey, "O patria mia," in Act III. Perhaps most impressive in this drama of public versus private needs are the instances of solo voice pitted directly against complex ensembles and vast choruses: the tenor in the temple scene in Act I, the mezzo-soprano in the judgment scene in Act IV, and especially the soprano in the great triumphal scene in Act II.

Met History

Aida first came to the Met during the "German Seasons" of the 1880s and was performed in German until 1891. (The Met's opening 1883–84 season was a financial disaster, so for a few seasons the company hired less expensive German singers and had them sing in their native language.) Aida has been among the most popular operas in the Met's repertory since those early days. Conductor Arturo Toscanini inaugurated his Met career with a spectacular new production (even though the previous production was only a year old) for opening night of the 1908-09 season. That performance featured the Met debut of Czech soprano Emmy Destinn (who would sing the title role 52 times at the Met through 1920) as well as American mezzo Louise Homer (who sang Amneris 97 times between 1900 and 1927), Enrico Caruso (91 performances as Radamès at the Met between 1903 and 1919), and the great baritone Pasquale Amato (79 appearances between 1903 and 1919). Other unforgettable Aidas at the Met include Zinka Milanov (1938-58), Elisabeth Rethberg (1922-42), and Leontyne Price (from 1961 until her farewell appearance at the Met in 1985). The current production by Sonja Frisell, with sets by the acclaimed film production designer Gianni Quaranta (A Room with a View), premiered in 1988 with James Levine conducting a cast headed by Leona Mitchell, Fiorenza Cossotto, Plácido Domingo, Sherrill Milnes, and Paul Plishka.

Program Note

fter the 1867 premiere in Paris of Verdi's Don Carlos, Camille du Locle, the composer's Parisian friend and co-librettist for that opera, persisted in attempts to further collaborate with the most famous opera composer in the world at the time. The two struck up a correspondence after du Locle's return from a trip to Egypt: "a land," wrote Verdi, "which once possessed a grandeur and a civilization which I could never bring myself to admire." How ironic that he would, not long after, embark on one of the most notable artistic monuments of 19th-century "Egyptomania," the fad for all things Egyptian that followed Napoleon's expeditions in 1797–1801 and the subsequent magnificent archeological discoveries.

The process that led to Aida began with the Khedive of Egypt, Ismail Pasha, known as Ismail the Magnificent, who stated in 1879 (the same year in which he was toppled from power by the British), "My country is no longer in Africa; we are now part of Europe." As part of the festivities marking the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869, the Khedive invited Verdi to compose a celebratory ode, but the composer declined: he had no desire to write pièces d'occasion. Determined to secure a new work by Verdi, the Khedive then offered a much more attractive commission—a new opera to open Cairo's extravagant new opera house, for which the composer was offered unlimited rehearsal time whenever he wished. When Verdi learned that Wagner might be offered the project should the great Italian composer continue to be obdurate, he capitulated almost immediately. A shrewd businessman who recognized the value of having a ruler so desirous of his services, Verdi requested—and received—a fee four times what he was paid for Don Carlos.

It was du Locle who brought to Verdi's attention the scenario that eventually became Aida, but if he had hoped for a French-language, Parisian version of the opera, his hopes were dashed by the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War, which threw the French capital into chaos. Verdi also encountered the usual complications attendant on completing a libretto with sufficient specimens of "parola scenica" (a term he invented in a letter to his Italian librettist Antonio Ghislanzoni in 1870 to describe words and phrases that leap off the page in moments of heightened drama, such as "Ritorna vincitor!"), and casting the La Scala and Cairo premieres proved troublesome, as well. Ultimately, the delays prevented the work from being ready for the 1869 opening of the Cairo Opera House, and Khedive Ismael had to be content with a performance of Rigoletto instead. Finally, with all the complexities resolved, Aida received its world premiere in Cairo on December 24, 1871, and its European premiere in Milan on February 8, 1872. The La Scala performance—Verdi cared more about this one was a huge success with the public, but the critics were less happy with the musical mixture of "the modern school" (influences from Wagner, Meyerbeer, and Gounod) and traditional Italian traits than they had been with Don Carlos.

Program Note CONTINUED

Verdi, worried about critical reaction, wrote to his friend Clarina Maffei with regard to the fourth production of the opera in Padua:

The success of Aida, as you know, was outspoken and decisive, untainted by ifs and buts and such unkind phrases as Wagnerism, the Future, the Art of Melody, etc., etc. The audience surrendered to its feelings and applauded. That's all!

Verdi himself conducted the first Parisian performance on March 22, 1880, and this time, it was an unqualified success with public and press alike. Sometimes it takes a few years, or more than a few, to bring a work into proper focus.

That Verdi accepted the Khedive's commission is both somewhat surprising—in light of his characteristic demands for original, even experimental theatrical works and typical: it was not unknown for him to be drawn to simpler, more old-fashioned plots in the wake of radical endeavors. The love-triangle of Idamante, Ilia, and Electra in Mozart's Idomeneo some 90 years earlier is a predecessor for Radamès, Aida, and Amneris in Aida; Verdi described the plot as "not entirely new," its outline simple and straightforward. What attracted him was the sheer theatricality of the story, among other things, including the possibilities of new and exotic orchestral colors. The more limited orchestras of earlier 19th-century Italian opera had long since been replaced by immense ensembles—in this case, including six "Egyptian" trumpets (actually Roman-made), a military banda (every town had its brass band for public occasions, and they are an enduring part of Verdi's orchestras), and an underground ensemble of four trumpets, four trombones, and bass drum for the tomb scene. The distinctive coloration of this opera begins with the first ultra-soft, muted violin sounds at the start of the Prelude; this sort of atmospheric approach, beginning and ending softly, with richer, fuller sonorities in the middle, was fashionable at the time, but Verdi's canonic workings and radical harmonies are his own. We hear an initial theme—a rising fragment ending with a "sighing figure"—that is associated throughout the opera with the heroine Aida and love first repressed, then admitted, followed by a more menacing descending theme treated in counterpoint and associated with the priests of Fthà, or Ptah, the creator god and demiurge who existed before all other things in Egyptian mythology. (We hear Aida's theme memorably in Act III played by the flutes, a high sustained tone in the violins, and cellos sotto voce, as she is waiting for Radamès in the temple.) Other equally memorable orchestral sounds are to be found in abundance—for example, the translucent tapestry of strings at the start of Act III, with the note G played in various ways (pizzicato, muted, tremolando, distributed across four octaves in the first violins in swaying fashion). The result is a texture of incomparable delicacy, mystery, and beauty, of nocturnal stillness that is nonetheless vibrant with quivering life.

But this, of course, is an Italian opera, in which voices reign supreme. Verdi's publisher Ricordi describes Aida as being around 20 years old, of "a loving nature," with "meekness and gentleness" her chief characteristics. This loving nature has musical heights and depths; we hear despair, longing, and ardor with a huge vocal wingspan in "Ritorna vincitor!" and plaintive homesickness in "O patria mia," her Act III romanza. "Oh my country, never more will I see you," she sings before and after each verse, the line often splitting into expressive fragments. Her father, Amonasro, capable of lyricism when he is persuading Aida to do his bidding, shows his true colors when he bursts forth in anger against the Egyptians. "Just as a man in a towering rage oversteps all the bounds of order, moderation, and propriety and forgets himself completely, so should the music likewise forget itself," Mozart said of Osmin's music in his Die Entführung aus dem Serail, and the same is true of Amonasro. Radamès is given sufficient tenor heroics to satisfy any operagoer, until he realizes in Act III that he has betrayed his country. The lyrical sweetness of his part in the death-duet at the opera's conclusion is a new vein of pathos for him. The mezzo-soprano Amneris is by far the most complex of the major characters. She genuinely loves Radamès, but she is a master of dissimulation, accustomed to power, and determined to humiliate Aida; the melody associated with her tends to appear in the orchestra, with the vocal line ("parlante melodico," or "melodious speech") grafted onto it. But when she pleads with Radamès in Act IV ("Ah! tu dei vivere"), Verdi gives her some of the most anguished, majestic, and beautiful melody ever written for a mezzo, culminating in a plea to the gods for mercy ("Numi, pietà"—words Aida had sung earlier) couched as gasping, sobbing fragments. Ramfis is among the most powerful of all the priests, hermits, and prophets sprinkled throughout Verdi's operas, and he is an especially unyielding and bloodthirsty specimen of the type. In the judgment scene of Act IV, he and his priests sing a version of plainchant-like melody—not to be found in any liturgy—of Verdi's invention, and he is often accompanied by the orchestra's version of sounds from the crypt.

This opera was Verdi's hail-and-farewell to the French-derived Italianate version of grand opera, based on history (or imagined history) and filled with huge ceremonial scenes, crowd scenes, massed forces of many kinds. The second scene in Act I, with its invocations of Fthà to melodies made to sound non-Western (a kind of exotic wailing); the dances for Moorish slaves and for the temple priestesses; the massing of male chorus, female chorus, banda, the soloists, and the entire orchestra for the triumphal scene of Act II: these are guaranteed to wow the spectator. But Verdi has a heartbreaking habit in his late tragedies of pulling the camera away from the gigantic and the public to focus instead on the most intimate matters of love and death, and he does so here. The work's final moments, with the chorus above the tomb chanting "Immenso Fthà" and Amneris pleading in anguished monotone for Radamès's soul, are like none other in operatic history.

—Susan Youens

Susan Youens is the J. W. Van Gorkom Professor of Music at the University of Notre Dame and has written eight books on the music of Franz Schubert and Hugo Wolf.

The Cast

Daniele Rustioni CONDUCTOR (MILAN, ITALY)

THIS SEASON Aida for his debut at the Met, Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci in Zurich, L'Elisir d'Amore in St. Petersburg, Johann Strauss Jr.'s Eine Nacht in Venedig in Lyon, La Traviata at Covent Garden, Rigoletto at the Paris Opera, Verdi's Requiem in Budapest, and concerts with Florence's Orchestra della Toscana.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performances include La Traviata in Orange, Venice, and at the Berlin Staatsoper; Mozart's Requiem and Rossini's Stabat Mater in Florence; Il Trittico in Rome; Rigoletto at the Bavarian State Opera; Falstaff and Nabucco in Stuttgart; Luisa Miller in Naples and Budapest; and La Juive and Simon Boccanegra at the Lyon Opera, where he will become music director later this year. He has also conducted Il Trovatore, Un Ballo in Maschera, and La Bohème at La Scala; Aida in Verona; Madama Butterfly at the Paris Opera, Bavarian State Opera, and in Tokyo; L'Elisir d'Amore at Covent Garden; Stiffelio, Il Trovatore, and I Masnadieri in Venice; Il Viaggio a Reims in Zurich; Il Turco in Italia and L'Italiana in Algeri in Turin; and Il Signor Bruschino at the Rossini Opera Festival in Pesaro. He has served as the principal conductor of the Orchestra della Toscana since 2014.

Krassimira Stoyanova soprano (veliko tarnovo, bulgaria)

THIS SEASON The title role of Aida at the Met; Elizabeth in Don Carlo at La Scala, Covent Garden, and the Vienna State Opera; the title role of Lucrezia Borgia at the Salzburg Festival; and Verdi's Requiem at La Scala and in Vienna and Zurich.

MET APPEARANCES Desdemona in Otello, Mimì in La Bohème, Donna Anna in Don Giovanni, Micaëla in Carmen, Violetta in La Traviata (debut, 2001), Liù in Turandot, and Nedda in Pagliacci.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performances include Danae in Strauss's Die Liebe der Danae and the Marschallin in Der Rosenkavalier at the Salzburg Festival; Verdi's Requiem in Orange; Amelia Grimaldi in Simon Boccanegra at La Scala and the Berlin Staatsopera; the title role of Rusalka and Amelia in Un Ballo in Maschera at the Vienna State Opera; Aida at the Bavarian State Opera; and Marguerite in Faust at the Berlin Staatsopera, Deutsche Opera Berlin, and Paris Opera. She has also sung Mathilde in Guillaume Tell, Leonora in Il Trovatore, the title role of Luisa Miller, and Amelia Grimaldi at the Bavarian State Opera; Tatiana in Eugene Onegin at Covent Garden; Marguerite in Barcelona; and Mimì and the title roles of Anna Bolena and Ariadne auf Naxos at the Vienna State Opera.

Violeta Urmana mezzo-soprano (kazlu rodos, lithuania)

THIS SEASON Amneris in Aida at the Met, Vienna State Opera, and on tour with Plácido Domingo; Kundry in Parsifal in Budapest; Verdi's Requiem with the London Symphony Orchestra; and a recital in Madrid.

MET APPEARANCES Santuzza in Cavalleria Rusticana, the title role of Aida, Odabella in Attila, Maddalena in Andrea Chénier, Eboli in Don Carlo, Kundry (debut, 2001), and the title roles of Tosca, Ariadne auf Naxos, and La Gioconda.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performances include Azucena in II Trovatore in Amsterdam; Jocaste in Oedipus Rex at the Aix-en-Provence Festival; Kundry at the Vienna State Opera; and Santuzza in St. Petersburg, Beijing, and at La Scala. She has also sung Amneris and Azucena in Verona; Kundry and Eboli at Deutsche Oper Berlin and the Vienna State Opera; Leonora in La Forza del Destino at the Paris Opera, Covent Garden, and in Barcelona; Tosca in Florence, Los Angeles, Bilbao, and at the Vienna State Opera; Lady Macbeth in Macbeth in Madrid; Gioconda at the Paris Opera and Covent Garden; and Isolde in Tristan und Isolde at the Paris Opera, Vienna State Opera, Deutsche Oper Berlin, BBC Proms, and in Rome, Naples, Madrid, and Helsinki.

Jorge de León tenor (santa cruz de tenerife, spain)

THIS SEASON Radamès in Aida for his debut at the Met, Gustavo in Un Ballo in Maschera and Cavaradossi in Tosca at Deutsche Opera Berlin, Calàf in Turandot in Macau, Macduff in Macbeth and Cavaradossi with the Vienna State Opera, Don Fadrique in Vives's La Villana and Pinkerton in Madama Butterfly in Madrid, and Radamès on tour with Plácido Domingo. CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performances include Cavaradossi at the Bavarian State Opera, Lyric Opera of Chicago, and in Tokyo, Seville, and Jerez; Don José in Carmen in Verona; the title role of Andrea Chénier in Genoa and Las Palmas; Giuseppe Hagenbach in La Wally in Monte Carlo; and Radamès at the Vienna State Opera and in Beijing. He has also sung Turiddu in Cavalleria Rusticana at Deutsche Oper Berlin and in Beijing; Radamès at La Scala, LA Opera, and in Naples, Verona, and Palermo; Calàf in Rome, Valencia, and Florence; Cavaradossi at the Berlin Staatsoper and in Barcelona, Pamplona, and Valladolid; Don José in Avenches, Switzerland; Canio in Pagliacci in Madrid; Pinkerton in Barcelona; and Verdi's Requiem in Turin.

VERDI

RIGOLETTO

APR 19, 22 eve, 27

Michael Mayer's hit production places the action in a neon-bedecked Las Vegas in 1960. Joseph Calleja is the womanizing Duke, Olga Peretyatko is the innocent Gilda, and Željko Lučić reprises his heartbreaking take on the title role. Pier Giorgio Morandi conducts.

Tickets from $25

metopera.org

The Cast CONTINUED

George Gagnidze
BARITONE (TBILISI, REPUBLIC OF GEORGIA)

THIS SEASON Amonasro in Aida at the Met, in Tblisi, and on tour with Plácido Domingo; Scarpia in Tosca and Carlo Gérard in Andrea Chénier at Deutsche Oper Berlin; and Amonasro and Carlo Gérard with San Francisco Opera.

MET APPEARANCES Tonio in Pagliacci, the title role of Rigoletto (debut, 2009), Alfio in Cavalleria Rusticana, Scarpia, the title role in Macbeth, and Shaklovity in Khovanshchina. CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performances include Amonasro at the Paris Opera and La Scala, Rigoletto at Deutsche Oper Berlin, the title role of Falstaff in Tokyo, Tonio at LA Opera, and Scarpia at the Paris Opera and Vienna State Opera. He has also sung the title role of Simon Boccanegra in Hamburg, Madrid, and at the Bavarian State Opera; the title role of Nabucco in Orange and Palermo; Alfio at the Vienna State Opera and in Barcelona; lago in Otello in Athens and Hamburg; Macbeth at Deutsche Oper Berlin and in Genoa; Miller in Luisa Miller in Valencia; Germont in La Traviata at La Scala and in Verona; and Rigoletto at La Scala, the Aix-en-Provence Festival, LA Opera, and in Tokyo, Weimar, and Parma.

James Morris BASS-BARITONE (BALTIMORE, MARYLAND)

THIS SEASON Ramfis in Aida, Don Fernando in Fidelio, and the 50th Anniversary Gala at the Met; and Dr. Schön/Jack the Ripper in Lulu at English National Opera.

MET APPEARANCES He has sung nearly 1000 performances in 60 roles since his 1971 debut as the King in Aida, including Wotan in the Ring cycle; Hans Sachs in Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg; Claggart in Billy Budd; Jacopo Fiesco in Simon Boccanegra; Scarpia in Tosca; Claudius in Hamlet; Philip II in Don Carlo; lago in Otello; Méphistophélès in Faust; and the title roles of Der Fliegende Holländer, Boris Godunov, and Don Giovanni.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS In recent seasons, he has sung the Old Doctor in Vanessa with the Santa Fe Opera, the Four Villains in Les Contes d'Hoffmann and Hans Sachs with Lyric Opera of Chicago, and the Doctor in Wozzeck with English National Opera. He has appeared in all the world's leading opera houses and with major orchestras of Europe and the United States. One of the leading interpreters of Wagner's Wotan, he has sung the role in cycles at the Vienna State Opera, Bavarian State Opera, Deutsche Oper Berlin, Lyric Opera of Chicago, and San Francisco Opera, among others.

The Cast CONTINUED

Morris Robinson
BASS (ATLANTA, GEORGIA)

THIS SEASON The King in Aida and Sarastro in The Magic Flute at the Met, Timur in Turandot in Philadelphia, Porgy in Porgy and Bess at La Scala, Osmin in Die Entführung aus dem Serail at LA Opera, and Fasolt in Das Rheingold with the New York Philharmonic. MET PRODUCTIONS Ferrando in Il Trovatore, Sarastro in Die Zauberflöte, Reinmar in Tannhäuser, the High Priest of Baal in Nabucco, Mercury in Les Troyens, First Nazarene in Salome, and the Second Prisoner in Fidelio (debut, 2002).

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent appearances include Joe in Show Boat with Washington National Opera, Houston Grand Opera, San Francisco Opera, and Dallas Opera; Sarastro at Houston Grand Opera, Opera Australia, and the Ravinia Festival; Sparafucile in Rigoletto with Boston Lyric Opera and Atlanta Opera; Ramfis in Aida at the Ravinia Festival and Cincinnati Opera; Oroveso in Norma with LA Opera; and the Commendatore in Don Giovanni at Boston Lyric Opera, Houston Grand Opera, and Dallas Opera. He is a graduate of the Met's Lindemann Young Artist Development Program.