Synopsis

Prologue

Verona, 18th century. A chorus tells of the endless feud between the Montague and Capulet families, and of the love of their children, Roméo and Juliette.

Act I

At a masked ball in the Capulet palace, Juliette's cousin Tybalt assures Count Pâris that Juliette, who has been promised to him, will enchant him. Capulet presents his daughter to the guests and invites them to dance. Mercutio and Roméo, a Montague, have donned masks to sneak into the ball, together with other friends. Roméo tells them about a strange dream he has had, but Mercutio dismisses it as the work of the fairy Queen Mab. Roméo watches Juliette dance and instantly falls in love with her. Juliette explains to her nurse, Gertrude, that she has no interest in marriage, but when Roméo approaches her in a quiet moment, both feel that they are meant for each other. Just as they discover each other's identities, Tybalt happens upon them and recognizes Roméo. Capulet prevents him from attacking Roméo, who with his friends beats a hasty retreat.

Act II

Later that night, Roméo enters the Capulets' garden, looking for Juliette. When she steps out onto her balcony, he declares his love. Servants briefly interrupt their encounter. When they are alone once again, Juliette assures Roméo that she will be his forever.

Act III

Roméo visits Frère Laurent in his cell and confesses his love for Juliette. Shortly thereafter, she also appears with Gertrude. Hoping that their love might reconcile their families, Frère Laurent marries them.

Intermission (AT APPROXIMATELY 9:20 PM)

Outside the Capulet palace, Roméo's page, Stéphan, sings a song about a turtledove imprisoned in a nest of vultures. This provokes a fight with several of the Capulets. Mercutio comes to Stéphan's aid, but is challenged to fight himself by Tybalt. Roméo steps between them and asks Tybalt to forget about the hatred between their families. Tybalt has nothing but scorn for him, and when he kills Mercutio in their duel, Roméo stabs Tybalt to death. The Duke of Verona appears, and partisans of both families demand justice. Roméo is exiled from the city.

Act IV

Roméo and Juliette have spent their secret wedding night in her room. She forgives him for killing Tybalt. The newlyweds passionately declare their love as day is dawning. They can hardly bring themselves to say goodbye. After Roméo has left, Capulet appears together with Frère Laurent and announces to his daughter that she is to marry Pâris that same day. Desperate, Juliette turns to Frère Laurent, who gives her a potion that will make her appear to be dead. He promises that she will awaken with Roméo beside her. Love lends Juliette courage: she overcomes her fear and swallows the poison. On the way to the chapel where the wedding to Pâris is to take place, Juliette collapses. To the guests' horror, Capulet announces that she is dead.

Act V

Roméo breaks into the Capulets' crypt. Faced with the seemingly dead body of his wife, he takes poison. At that moment, Juliette awakes, and they share a final dream of future happiness. When Juliette realizes that Roméo is about to die, she decides to follow him so their love can continue in the afterlife. Before they both die, they ask God for forgiveness.

Roméo et Juliette

Premiere: Théâtre Lyrique, Paris, 1867

Roméo et Juliette, perhaps the most enduringly successful of the many operatic settings of the world's most well-known love story, is sophisticated, intelligently wrought, and ravishingly beautiful. It is an excellent example of French Romanticism, a tradition that values subtlety, sensuality, and graceful vocal delivery over showy effects, and the music provides a powerful dramatic vehicle worthy of its Shakespearean source. In the opera, there is a slight shift of focus away from the word games of the original play and a greater focus on the two lovers, who are given four irresistible duets. Some readjustment of plot was necessary to allow for this (the lovers have a brief final reunion in the tomb scene, for example, which does not happen in the play). But audiences have been well compensated for these minor infractions against Shakespeare.

The Setting

In Shakespeare's lifetime, Italy was a land of many small city-states in constant conflict with one another. The blood feud between families that is at the core of this story, set in Verona, was a central feature of Italian political and social life during this era. Yet this same war-scarred land was also the cradle of the Renaissance, with its astounding explosion of art and science. The image that this mythical Verona evokes, then, is a beautiful but dangerous world where poetry or violence might erupt at any moment. The Met's new production moves the action to the 18th century.

The Creators

Charles Gounod (1818–1893) showed early promise as a musician and achieved commercial success with Faust in 1859, followed eight years later by the equally well-received Roméo et Juliette. Among his most famous works is a setting of the "Ave Maria" based on a piece by J. S. Bach. Later in life, he composed several oratorios. Jules Barbier (1825–1901) and Michel Carré (1821–1872) were the leading librettists of their time in France, providing the texts for many other successful operas, including Faust for Gounod, Mignon (also from Goethe) and Hamlet for Ambroise Thomas, and Les Contes d'Hoffmann (Barbier alone) for Jacques Offenbach. The plays of William Shakespeare (1564–1616) have provided an abundance of material for such diverse opera composers as Giuseppe Verdi, Benjamin Britten, Gioachino Rossini, Samuel Barber, Thomas Adès, and even Richard Wagner (whose youthful work from 1836, Das Liebesverbot, is based on Measure for Measure).

The Music

Gounod infuses this classic drama with an elegant musical aura that reflects the soaring poetry of the original. A solo flute, for example, sets a fragile and painfully beautiful mood in the prelude to the bedroom scene in Act IV. When Gounod explores the darker and more violent side of the story, his music creates drama without resorting to bombast. A reserved melancholy creates all the necessary tension. This is apparent in the striking opening chorus and especially in the arresting ensemble "Ô jour de deuil" in Act III, when the various characters' destinies intersect in a tragic instant. For the story's more lighthearted moments, Gounod supplied the sort of buoyant melodies that made his Faust a huge hit with audiences. The baritone sets an eerie and frivolous mood with his song about Queen Mab and her fairy world of dreams, "Mab, la reine des mensonges," early in Act I. Shortly after, the heroine takes the stage with the giddy coloratura gem "Je veux vivre." Moments such as these add musical and dramatic texture to the tragedy, admired for its contrast of light and dark. The focus of the story, however, remains firmly on the two lovers.

Met History

Roméo et Juliette (or rather, Romeo e Giulietta) received a single performance in the Met's first season (1883–84), sung in Italian. The brothers Jean and Édouard de Reszke and the American soprano Emma Eames performed the work in 1891, which was the first performance of a French opera given in French at the Met. It proved so popular that the work opened the Met season six times between 1891 and 1906. Eames shared performances with the Australian soprano Dame Nellie Melba, who sang Juliette 33 times between 1894 and 1901. Swedish tenor Jussi Björling and Brazilian soprano Bidu Sayão teamed up for only two performances of this opera, yet a recording of the 1947 broadcast continues to impress listeners today as one of the most memorable performances in this repertory at the Met. A new production in 1967 featured Franco Corelli and Mirella Freni as the young lovers. Roméos featured in this production in later seasons included Nicolai Gedda, Plácido Domingo, Neil Shicoff, Alfredo Kraus, and Roberto Alagna, opposite such Juliettes as Anna Moffo, Judith Blegen, Catherine Malfitano, Ruth Ann Swenson, and Angela Gheorghiu. In 2005, Guy Joosten's production premiered with Ramón Vargas and Maureen O'Flynn as the lead couple, and Natalie Dessay and Anna Netrebko were notable Juliettes in subsequent performances. This new production by Bartlett Sher, starring Diana Damrau and Vittorio Grigolo and conducted by Gianandrea Noseda, opened on New Year's Eve, 2016.

Program Note

“God! What a fine subject! How it lends itself to music!” French composer Hector Berlioz wrote these words as he contemplated turning Shakespeare’s Romeo and Juliet into an opera; instead, he made his own Roméo et Juliette a unique hybrid of dramatic symphony and cantata in 1839.

His younger colleague Charles Gounod chose the more conventional path and with his opera Roméo et Juliette of 1867 created one of the most beautiful and compelling treatments of this now more than 400-year-old romantic tragedy. At the time he wrote it, Gounod was in extreme need of an operatic success. Having chosen to ally himself with Paris’s recently formed and innovative Théâtre Lyrique rather than the long-established Paris Opéra, he had become one of France’s leading opera composer in 1859 with his Faust, suavely adapted from Goethe’s epic verse drama. But since then, he had suffered three disastrous opera premieres, including his Provençal pastoral tragedy Mireille, one of his personal favorites among his operas. Yet Léon Carvalho, the energetic manager of the Théâtre Lyrique, had not lost faith in him, and French opera lovers still eagerly looked to him to produce another hit like Faust.

One of the most successful moments in that opera was the sensuous love scene between Faust and Marguerite in her garden. Though he once flirted with studying for the priesthood, Gounod was a man who easily succumbed to romantic temptations—a weakness that tormented his wife. As biographer Steven Huebner put it, “tension between the bon vivant and the ascetic would remain an integral part of his character.” So it is not surprising that by 1865, he had become captivated with the possibilities of Romeo and Juliet, although, pessimistically, he told colleagues that it would be his last work for the stage.

Carvalho chose a seasoned team to create the libretto: Jules Barbier and Michel Carré. They had scripted many successful French operas, including Faust and Ambroise Thomas’s Mignon and Hamlet; Barbier alone had written the libretto for Offenbach’s Les Contes d’Hoffmann. Unlike the librettist for Vincenzo Bellini’s 1830 Romeo and Juliet-based opera I Capuleti e i Montecchi, they were reasonably faithful to Shakespeare’s original, even translating many lines directly into French. Their major change was to allow Roméo to live long enough to enable a heartbreaking final duet with Juliette. The need for embellishment was minimal, as Shakespeare had given operatic adaptors much to work with. “The play is itself notably rich in lyrical ‘set pieces,’” writes Huebner, “including Mercutio’s burlesque Queen Mab speech, Friar Lawrence’s sermons, Juliet’s soliloquy with the vial, the sonnet of the two lovers at their first meeting, and their later dawn poem about the nightingale and the lark.”

Premiering on April 27, 1867, only a month after Verdi’s Don Carlos debuted at the Opéra, Roméo et Juliette was the spectacular success everyone was longing for. Audiences packed the Théâtre Lyrique night after night to see it. Its immense popularity was amplified by the Exposition Universelle, which had opened on April 1; this gigantic world's fair—celebrating all things French and the glories of Haussmann's recently rebuilt Paris—drew national and international visitors to the capital in numbers never seen before.

By July, Roméo et Juliette had opened at London's Covent Garden, and before the year was out, it had reached Belgium and Germany. With this opera, Gounod was at the summit of his career: a peak he would never again achieve. In the words of Camille Saint-Saëns, "all women sang his melodies, all young composers [in France] imitated his style." He would hold an enduring influence over such composers as Georges Bizet and Jules Massenet; his lyrical style would inspire Gabriel Fauré's early songs; and even artists like Debussy and Ravel, who took very different paths, would feel his sway. When, in 1869, the impresario Auguste Mariette began to search for a composer to write the opera to open the new opera house in Cairo—what would eventually become Aida—his stated candidates were Verdi, Wagner, and Gounod.

Roméo et Juliette triumphed in spite of the fact that it did not follow in the French grand opera tradition that had dominated Parisian opera houses—a style that favored dazzling stage effects, massive choral scenes, and interpolated ballets. Despite the chorus that opens the opera and foretells Roméo and Juliette's fate, the jubilant crowd at the Capulet ball, and the heroically tragic choral finale of Act III, this is predominantly a very intimate opera that focuses on the four glorious duet scenes for the two lovers.

Gounod was also generous in providing stunning moments for each of his lovers to shine on his and her own. For his first Juliette, he had Marie Miolan-Carvalho, the wife of Léon Carvalho and the undisputed star of the Théâtre Lyrique, who had earlier created the roles of Marguerite and Mireille. Because she had a brilliant coloratura technique and an effortless upper range, she prevailed upon the composer to add the exuberant waltz aria at the ball, "Je veux vivre" (Gounod instead had wanted to concentrate his energies on her second aria as she takes the potion). We can be very grateful to Miolan-Carvalho for insisting on this scintillating showpiece, with its exacting chromatic scales and its thrilling roulades cresting at a high D.

The aria the composer cared most about for his heroine was the so-called "Poison Aria"—"Amour ranime mon courage"—of Act IV, in which Juliette contemplates taking the potion Frère Laurent has prepared for her. A demanding scena combining sections of recitative and aria and expressing a wide range of emotion, it is more suited to a dramatic soprano than a lyric coloratura. Here, Gounod takes Shakespeare's extended soliloquy for Juliet in the play and sets it to music of electrifying sweep and power.

Roméo's two arias are also strongly contrasted: the first more conventional, the second a tragic scene in a strikingly innovative style and form. "Ah! lève-toi, soleil" is his Act II showpiece, sung as he arrives below Juliette's balcony. Solo clarinet and harp color this beautiful display of legato ardor, topped by golden B-flats. In Act V, Roméo's second aria, "Salut! Tombeau," is something quite different: a tissue of musical reminiscences of happier times carried by the orchestra as melodic leader, with the singer given a flexible mixture of recitative and arioso molded to the words. At the words, "O ma femme," we hear the cellos reprise their unforgettable melody from the wedding night, now transformed from sensuality to aching loss.

Two secondary characters are given arias that bring touches of lightness to relieve the drama's shadows. In Act I, Mercutio's famous Queen Mab speech about the diminutive fairy who torments the dreams of all sleepers is turned into a quicksilver scherzo. The page Stéphano's equally mocking "Que fais-tu, blanche tourterelle?" instigates the series of fatal duels. This is the obligatory aria for the dugazon: the traditional second-soprano role in French operas of the day, like Siébel in Faust.

An important—but often overlooked—aspect of Gounod's operatic innovation is his use of the orchestra. "According to Gounod," writes Huebner, "the voice must be assisted by the orchestra in its mission to communicate 'truth.' ... At Gounod's best moments, voice and instrumental strain enter into a symbiotic relationship where each is given nearly equal importance in the lyrical whole."

We hear this in several extraordinary passages. The Act II balcony scene begins with an orchestral prelude of mysterious beauty for strings and harp. It then returns at the end of the act with Roméo's exquisite countermelody "Va! repose en paix" floating above it. In Act IV, the wedding night scene opens with perhaps the most magnificent melody in the entire opera and, remarkably, one that will never be sung. Four cellos launch it in their richest, most sensuous tones; Verdi may have been inspired by this to use the same scoring in his Act I love scene in Otello. Huebner calls it "a small, but graphic, tone-poem about the night that has just passed."

As Frère Laurent instructs Juliette to take his potion, Gounod provides an equally potent brew in his blending of bass voice with the orchestra to create an uncannily chilling atmosphere. In this unusual replacement for an aria, the flutes and other woodwinds sing the melody while the singer chants in a near monotone below.

The four love duets are among the greatest music Gounod ever wrote. The lovers' first meeting at the ball in Act I is the most formally structured, as they express their mutual attraction in metaphorical language. Gounod gives it a charmingly old-fashioned quality, like a court minuet of a century earlier.

Gounod's great gift for rendering intimate conversations in music, using an exceptional plasticity of vocal style, gives them a naturalness and truthfulness his French predecessors had never achieved. We hear this especially in the balcony scene, which is divided in two by a comic interlude when some of the Capulet men come to investigate and banter with Gertrude. Having individually declared their love, only in the duet's second portion do the lovers blend their voices together in rapturous close harmony.

In the wedding night scene's "Nuit d'hyménée," this lush, unified duet style is enhanced by sensual contrapuntal lines between the two lovers. This scene is structured around three repetitions of the words "Non! ce n'est pas le jour" as the lovers resist the idea of parting—each sung a step higher as the tension builds.

Act V's final duet is the duet of death as the lovers succumb to the cruelty of fate. The anguish of this scene is made virtually unbearable by the many reminiscences, in both the orchestra and the lovers' lines, of music from their most joyful moments: the ecstasy of the wedding night, their joint prayer at their wedding, Roméo's delirious reprise of "Non! ce n'est pas le jour." Gounod's last and most poignant musical transformation is his recasting of Act IV's passionate orchestral interlude as the lovers embraced into a heartrending farewell as Juliette sings her dying words.
